Writing a book is certainly a solitary task, but throughout the long process of researching the life of Eva Gore-Booth many people gave me invaluable support, information and advice. I owe a great deal of thanks to Maryann Valiulis for inviting me to conduct my post-doctoral research at Trinity College Dublin. To Christopher Fox, and the staff at the Keough-Naughton Institute for Irish Studies, University of Notre Dame, for providing such a warm and inspirational environment to finalise writing this book. To Mary McAuliffe, Bríona Nic Dhiarmada, Maria Luddy, Sally Munt and Ruán O'Donnell for reading various drafts of this work and providing advice and insightful comments which helped shape the final version.

I am indebted to various agencies for much needed financial support enabling me to dedicate myself to this research and to travel throughout Ireland, England and the United States for archival research. I am especially grateful to the Irish Research Council for the Humanities and Social Sciences for the award of a two-year Government of Ireland Post-Doctoral Fellowship, to the Royal Irish Academy for funding a research trip to Manchester and to the National Endowment for the Humanities for a generous one-year fellowship to complete this research.

Throughout the period of this research I was contacted by many local historians and interested parties who made me aware of unknown facts and invaluable primary source material. I owe thanks to Brendan Nelson for information on the history of the Sligo Feis Ceoil, Felix Larkin for alerting me to the exhibition of John Lavery's paintings, Richard Haworth for giving me access to his grandmother's collection of letters and Derek Clarke for his enquiries into the present whereabouts of the Eva Gore-Booth memorial window. Also I am grateful to Michael Herbert for introducing me to the Working Class Movement Library, for also generously providing access to materials in his personal collection and for organising a public talk in Manchester on Eva Gore-Booth.

I consulted many archives throughout the course of this research and I am most grateful to Sandra Stelts of Pennsylvania State University Libraries, Donal Tinney at Sligo County Library, Jane Parr and Kevin Bolton of Manchester Archives and Local Studies Central Library, Honora Faul, Keith Murphy and Sandra McDermott of the National Library of Ireland, James Peters at the University of Manchester Archives, John Hodgson at the John Rylands University Library, Darren Treadwell of the People's History Museum Archives, Pamela Cassidy of the Lissadell Estate and Kate Willson at the Parliamentary Archives in the Houses of Parliament. Many thanks also to Josslyn Gore-Booth for permission to publish from the Lissadell Papers, at the Public Records Office Northern Ireland.

Also heartfelt thanks to my many friends and family for their unwavering support and encouragement throughout this entire writing process. To my parents Chris and Marie Tiernan and my grandmother, Mollie Harmon, thank you for your constant love and support.
