Acknowledgements

Naples is a wonderful city, but not the easiest place to undertake research. Many people and institutions helped me along the way.

My most sincere thanks to the British Academy for its generous support, without which research for this book would not have been possible. A British Academy Research Readership in 2005–07 and British Academy Small Research Grants in 2004, 2006, and 2012 were transformative. I gratefully acknowledge also the AHRC Matching Leave Award 2008–09, which was vital. Funding for historical research beyond the UK is now under such pressure that I am doubly grateful to these institutions.

The Eccellentissima Deputazione della Reale Cappella del Tesoro di San Gennaro in Naples granted me invaluable access to its splendid archive and I remain very grateful for that. I thank in particular Vice-President Riccardo Carafa d'Andria, for his organizational assistance, the Conte Don Alessandro d'Aquino del Principe di Caramanico for his enthusiastic encouragement, the Coordinatore della Segreteria, Dottore Francesco Pavolini, for his efficiency, and the archivist Cavaliere Michele Spinelli. Many of the silver reliquaries and devotional objects destined for the Treasury Chapel are now conserved in the Museo del Tesoro di San Gennaro. The Director of that museum, Dott. Paolo Jorio, and his staff courteously afforded me special access to their collections, for which I am much obliged. To undertake research at the Biblioteca Nazionale in Naples is always a pleasure. No library has a more evocative setting; and its holdings are astonishing. The staff there were unfailingly helpful. Dott.ssa Patrizia Nocera provided particularly meticulous assistance. Likewise I owe much to many at the Archivio di Stato in Naples, where I have lived all manner of emotions. I am grateful to the Soprintendenza per i Beni Architettonici e per il Paesaggio e per il Patrimonio Storico Artistico e Demoetnoantropologico di Napoli e Provincia for crucial assistance. Nicola Spinosa, Director of the Soprintendenza Speciale per il Polo Museale, for many years granted with astonishing efficiency my many requests for permissions to access buildings and take photographs. The superb collections of the Gabinetto delle Stampe at the Fondazione Pagliara in Naples enriched my research, and I would like to thank all the staff there, especially Dott.ssa Alessia Avallone. I am pleased also to acknowledge the thoughtfulness of Dott.ssa Tina Barbatelli, Director of La Certosa e Museo Nazionale di San Martino, Naples. Beyond Naples I owe particularly thanks to library staff at the British Library for their unfailing assistance, to the Biblioteca Angelica Vaticana, and to the Warburg Institute. Those institutions provide profoundly sustaining environments in which to study rare and special books.

Naples remains relatively unknown even to scholars of Italy. For that reason it was essential to include here many images and colour plates. Their publication was made possible by two grants, one from the Scouloudi Foundation in association with the Institute of Historical Research, and the other from the Millard Meiss Publication Fund. I am delighted to thank these institutions. The History of Art Department of the University of York also assisted towards costs of publication and photography. Massimo Velo assisted always cheerfully with requests for photography in Naples; and Marina Cotugno helped out at the last minute.

Lectures, research seminars, and papers that I have given at many institutions informed the writing of this book. I thank in particular colleagues and friends who listened to papers at various stages of this project and posed stimulating comments and questions at the University of Adelaide, Colorado University at Boulder, the Early Modern Seminar at the Courtauld Institute and University College London, Duke University, the University of East Anglia, Emory University, Harvard University, the University of Manchester, the Renaissance Research Seminar at the University of Oxford, Reading University, Smith College, Stockholm University, and the University of York. Teaching and supervising students compelled me to clarify ideas and think again. Many students gave a great deal along the way and I am glad to acknowledge their contribution.

Many scholars, friends, and colleagues read one or more chapters, discussed ideas, made invaluable suggestions, and offered wise advice. I am deeply indebted to Tommaso Astarita, Andrew Benjamin, Joseph Connors, Claire Farago, Craig Felton, Michael Gnehm, Dalia Judovitz, Margaret Littler, Mary Pardo, Walter Melion, and Mike Savage. I am grateful to the series editors Amelia Jones and Marsha Meskimmon for their support of the project throughout. In addition the following people made helpful contributions of all kinds ranging from rigorous discussion of ideas to providing the homeliest of apartments in Rome: Paola d'Agostino, Franco Benigno, Anna Botta, Caroline Bruzelius, Tom Conley, David Peters Corbett, Gérard Delille, Antonio Denunzio, Jorge Fernández-Santos Ortiz-Iribas, Giacomo di Fiore, Kirstin Kennedy, Dana Leibsohn, Emanuele Lugli, the late John Marino, Giovanni Muto, Nick Napoli, Genoveffa Palumbo, Alina Payne, Marcia Pointon, Charlotte Purkis, Abraham Ravett, Dee Reynolds, Louise Rice, Rose Marie San Juan, Maria Antonietta Visceglia, Massimo Visone, and Genevieve Warwick.

Lucia Binotti, Roger Ling, Michele Vescovi, and Alessandra Pompili were unstinting in their assistance with translating and interpreting documents of all kinds, and Mary Pardo with mercurial wit transformed baffling Italian into pellucid English when pressed for help on far too many occasions. Daniel Bridgman retrieved data and expertly prevented technological catastrophe. Maria-Anna Aristova and Giulia Zaffaroni undertook the task of taming an unruly bibliography and assisting with images with characteristic assiduity.

My appointment for a semester as Ruth and Clarence Professor of Renaissance Studies at Smith College in Massachusetts in 2014 offered me a wonderful combination of academic energy, beautiful surroundings, and collegial generosity that was perfect for my work. I warmly thank the Principal of Smith College, the members of the Kennedy Committee, and all my colleagues there – in the Art Department and beyond across the Smith campus and further afield in the Five College Consortium – for their warmth of welcome and intellectual engagement. Anna Botta, Brigitte Buettner, Craig Felton, and Alessandra Di Maio in particular gave hospitality and friendship way beyond the call of duty.

Writing this book was thrown off course when my laptop and external hard drive with the entire manuscript on them were burgled from our home in 2011, during events at York in 2012, and in 2015 during the very last stages of preparing the manuscript for press when my mother's wonderful nursing home, The Hope in Cambridge, was peremptorily and scandalously closed down by Healthcare Management Trust and the Holy Family of Bordeaux. My greatest debt is to all my friends who so generously gave inspirational kindness and support during those difficult times.

My many thanks also to Emma Brennan at Manchester University Press. I can now smile at these words with which in 1632 Cesare D'Engenio Caracciolo opened his book on the sacred in Naples: 'Opera un pezzo fa desiderata, ma hora la prima volta vede la luce delle stampe.' I hope that my parents, Eva Rainbow-Hills and Frederick Hills, will smile, too.

I hope that all these people know something of what I owe them.
