Acknowledgements

I would like to express my appreciation to the Family Support Agency for its generous support of the research presented here. In particular, I am grateful to Aideen Mooney, Head of Research for most of the duration of the study, for her contribution to the development of the research and encouragement throughout. I also wish to thank her successor, Brian O'Byrne, who ably steered the project to completion. I am grateful to the Board of the Agency and its Chair, Michael O'Kennedy, and to Pat Bennett, CEO, for their interest in and support of the research from conception to completion. The views expressed in the book are my own and do not necessarily reflect those of the Family Support Agency.

The Steering Committee of the study included Prof James Williams, Economic and Social Research Institute; Dr Stephanie O'Keeffe, National Director, Health and Well-being, Health Services Executive (HSE); Ann-Marie O'Connor, Department of Social Protection; and Deirdre Bodkin, Department of Justice, Equality and Defence. I am most grateful to them for generously giving of their time and expertise to the study, in particular to the design of the questionnaire. I wish especially to thank Prof Williams for his advice on sampling, design and analysis, and would like to thank him and Dr O'Keeffe, as well as the anonymous reviewers, for their most useful comments on earlier drafts of research reports, which formed the basis of this book.

The fieldwork and data analyses were carried out by Behaviour and Attitudes. I especially wish to thank Ian McShane, Managing Director, and Luke Reaper, Director, as well as Dean Howlin, who expertly and efficiently executed all of the data analyses, and Louise McGrillen who oversaw the fieldwork throughout the country. We are most grateful to Aidan Punch and Marie Hogarty of the Central Statistics Office for providing advice and special runs on the Census which assisted us in the design and selection of the sample. Appreciation is also expressed to the 1,404 respondents who participated in the main study, as well as the 48 respondents who took part in the qualitative study. Without their cooperation the study would not have been possible. Their views represent the views of many others like themselves and thus their inputs were invaluable.

Several colleagues assisted in conducting pilot interviews throughout the country, which were essential in providing insights which contributed to the main study. These were Dr Florence Craven, Amanda Holzworth, Mary McCarthy, Mairead O'Sullivan and Marianna Prontera. Special thanks are due to Amanda Holzworth, who worked closely with me at all stages of the research, from literature review and questionnaire design to preparation of tables and figures. Her expertise and commitment contributed immeasurably to the study.

Following the completion of the study, I presented preliminary results at the ISQOLS Conference (International Society for Quality of Life Studies) in Venice in 2012. Liz Eckermann invited me to contribute a chapter (Fine-Davis, 2014) based on my paper, to her forthcoming book, Gender, Lifespan and Quality of Life: An International Perspective, published by Springer in 2014. Some of the figures which appeared in that chapter (Figs. 13.1-13.9) also appear in this book (Figs. 3.2-3.5, 3.7-3.9, 10.1-10.2). I wish to thank Springer for granting me permission to reproduce them here. Also following the study, I completed a book on Changing Gender Roles: Three Decades of Attitude Change, published by Routledge in 2015. In order to bring the data in that book, which primarily focused on the period 1975-2005, up to date, I included some data from the present study on current attitudes to gender roles in Chapter 10 of that book. I wish to thank Routledge for granting permission to reproduce those tables and figures here (Tables 10.2-10.4 are reproduced here as Tables 3.1-3.3; Figs 10.1-10.4 correspond to Figs 3.2, 3.9, 3.7 and 3.10 here). All of the tables and figures used in the chapters for Springer and Routledge originally appeared in my report of the study to the Family Support Agency (Fine-Davis, 2011).

It was a pleasure to work with Manchester University Press. I wish in particular to thank Prof Rob Kitchin, National University of Ireland, Maynooth, Series Editor; Tony Mason and Thomas Dark, Senior Commissioning Editors; Rob Byron and Alun Richards. I am also grateful to Sarah Kendall of Out of House Publishing; to Liz Hudson of Little Red Pen; and to Judith Lavender for preparing a fine index.

Finally, I would like to express my thanks to the Sociology Department, School of Social Sciences and Philosophy, Trinity College Dublin, which hosted this research. In particular, I wish to thank Prof Daniel Faas, Head of Department, for his support and facilitation of the writing of this book. Warm appreciation is also due to Dr Gerald Morgan, Director, the Chaucer Hub, Trinity College, for his expert editorial comments and ongoing support and encouragement of my work.

The book is dedicated to my late father, Meyer Fine, and to my mother, Dinah Low Fine, who taught me what a happy family is. My mother managed to do this while skilfully balancing work and family life, and has continued to raise thought-provoking questions, rooted in her own experience, many of them during the course of the writing of this book.
