Notes on contributors

Alan Bryson is a Curator of Early Modern Collections at the British Library. He works on the reigns of Henry VIII and his son Edward VI, with a particular interest in relations between the crown and the nobility and gentry. He has written articles and essays on Tudor England and Ireland and co-edited Bess of Hardwick's Letters (2013), Verse Libel in Renaissance England and Scotland (2016) and a special issue of Huntington Library Quarterly, entitled Early Modern Manuscript Identities (2017). He is writing a monograph on Lordship and the Government of Mid-Tudor England.

Sara L. French is Lecturer in Landscape Architecture at SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry. She holds an MA and PhD in Art and Architectural History from Binghamton University and received her undergraduate degree from Wells College. Her publications include a forthcoming essay, 'Re-placing gender in Elizabethan gardens', in Mapping Gendered Routes and Spaces in the Early Modern World; 'Building gender in(to) the Elizabethan prodigy house', in Origins of Scientific Learning: Essays on Culture and Knowledge in Early Modern Europe (2007), which she co-edited with biologist Kay Etheridge; and 'A widow building: Bess of Hardwick at Hardwick Hall', in Widowhood in Early Modern Europe (2003), edited by Allison Levy.

Susan Frye is Professor of English at the University of Wyoming. She is the author of Elizabeth I: The Competition for Representation (1999), co-editor with Karen Robertson of Maids and Mistresses, Cousins and Queens, Women's Alliances in Early Modern England (2010), and author of Pens and Needles: Women's Textualities in Early Modern England (2010). She is currently at work on a book on the multicultural agency of Mary, Queen of Scots.

Lisa Hopkins is Professor of English and Head of Graduate School at Sheffield Hallam University and co-editor of Shakespeare, the journal of the British Shakespeare Society. Her recent publications include Renaissance Drama on the Edge (2014), Drama and the Succession to the Crown, 1561–1633 (2011), Essex: The Cultural Impact of an Elizabethan Courtier, co-edited with Annaliese Connolly (2013) and Goddesses and Queens: The Iconography of Elizabeth I, co-edited with Annaliese Connolly (2007). She is co-editing (with Tom Rutter) a companion to the literary cultures of the Cavendish family.

Jessica L. Malay is Professor of Renaissance Literature at the University of Huddersfield. She is editor of Anne Clifford's Autobiographical Writing (2018) and Anne Clifford's Great Books of Record (2015), a Leverhulme-funded project. She has also published The Case of Mistress Mary Hampson (2014), an early modern domestic abuse narrative. She has written a number of journal articles on early modern women and culture.

Imogen Julia Marcus is Senior Lecturer in English Language at Edge Hill University. She studied English Literature and Language at the University of Oxford before completing an MLitt in English Language at the University of Glasgow. From 2008 to 2012 she was the AHRC-funded PhD student on the Letters of Bess of Hardwick project, based at the University of Glasgow. Her doctoral thesis contributes to the field of historical pragmatics and investigates the discourse marking functions of the lexical features and, so, for and but in a corpus of Bess's early modern English letters.

Felicity Lyn Maxwell is a Government of Ireland Postdoctoral Fellow at the National University of Ireland, Galway, where she is writing a monograph on the intellectual correspondence of Dorothy Moore (c. 1612–64). Felicity was previously a postdoctoral researcher on the collaborative project RECIRC: The Reception and Circulation of Early Modern Women's Writing, 1550–1700, directed by Marie-Louise Coolahan at NUI Galway, and a Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada-funded doctoral researcher on Alison Wiggins's Letters of Bess of Hardwick project at the University of Glasgow. Felicity has published articles in Lives & Letters and Literature Compass.

Sara Jayne Steen is President Emerita of Plymouth State University in Plymouth, New Hampshire. She is the author or editor of five books, including The Letters of Lady Arbella Stuart (1994), has served as guest editor of journals such as Shakespeare Quarterly, and has written numerous articles and book chapters on early modern theatre and letters.

Alison Wiggins is Reader in English Language and Linguistics at the University of Glasgow. She currently holds an AHRC Leadership Fellowship for the project Archives and Writing Lives and she was previously Principal Investigator of the AHRC Letters of Bess of Hardwick project. Her monograph Bess of Hardwick's Letters: Language, Materiality and Early Modern Epistolary Culture was published as part of the Material Readings in Early Modern Cultures series (2017) and she has published on editing, digital humanities, Chaucer's readers and medieval romance.