Acknowledgements

As already noted in the Preface, our first thanks are to the Arts and Humanities Research Council who generously funded the ‘Moving Manchester’ project, in association, of course, with our employers, Lancaster University, who supplied the necessary infrastructure and administrative support. The project team would also like to their Departments (English and Creative Writing and the Department of European Languages and Cultures) for their support of the project team as well as the ex-Dean of the Arts Faculty, Professor David Whitton, who commissioned Robert Crawshaw to write the funding-bid: without his vision and commitment to increasing funded research across the Faculty, this project would never have happened. In addition to the AHRC, the project was also fortunate to receive financial support from Arts Council England (North West) in connection with our closing conference and the ‘Writing Manchester’ exhibition held at Manchester Central Library in the autumn of 2009, and we would like to take this opportunity to offer special thanks to Avril Heffernan and all other ACE-North West staff for their interest in the project from its earliest days. Finally, in terms of the project’s ‘prehistory’ we are indebted to David Law, whose PhD thesis, “‘Guddling for Words’: Representations of the North and Northernness in Post-1950 South Pennine Literature’ (Lancaster University, 2004), was in many ways a precursor to Postcolonial Manchester; it is an outstanding piece of original research and one that is frequently referenced in the chapters that follow.

Moving on to the writers and writing organizations who were the life-blood of the project, our first debt – as detailed in both the Preface and the Introduction – is the literature development organization, Commonword, which has been operating in the city since 1977. Our sincere thanks go not only to Peter Kalu but also Martin de Mello and

Acknowledgements

Cathy Bolton who have granted us their time and support from the very beginning of the project. In addition, we would like to thank literature development worker Steve Dearden, together with members of 'the FED' (formerly the Federation of Worker Writers and Community Publishers) for steering us in the direction of Commonword as well as for their subsequent advice, information and support.

Apart from Commonword, the 'Moving Manchester' project benefited from close working affiliations with Gatehouse, the Black Arts Alliance, Manchester Central Library, Manchester Jewish Museum, the People's History Museum and the Working-Class Museum, Salford, and we would like to extend our thanks to colleagues in all these institutions. Bill Williams, author of The Making of Manchester Jewry (1977), was especially encouraging and supportive when we were working on the bid, as was James Procter, whose work was, and continues to be, an inspiration and who has always shown close interest in the project. Thanks, too, to Shirley Chew, who generously dedicated an issue of Moving Worlds to the project outputs and shared with us her considerable editorial skills, and to Alan Rice, from the University of Central Manchester, whose ground-breaking research and exhibitions on the North West's share in the 'Black Atlantic' complement our own. Further, although we would ideally like to mention all the Manchester-based authors with whom we've worked by name, we shall have to restrict ourselves to the following: the novelist Joe Pemberton, with whom we first made contact when David Law was writing his PhD in the early 2000s and who has generously continued to share his publications, experiences and joyous enthusiasm with us ever since; the author and educationalist Qaisra Shahraz, who has been an invaluable consultant and enthusiastic supporter of the project from its earliest days; the poet Shamshad Khan, who has been a true friend and comrade on our journey and who delighted us with her performances on many occasions; and, finally, poet, novelist and dramatist SuAndi OBE, Director of the Black Arts Alliance and Honorary Creative Writing Fellow at the University of Leicester, who has been a staunch friend and supporter of the project throughout, generously sharing with us her considerable knowledge and challenging us when we needed it most.

The project's management group ('the MAG') met regularly during the lifetime of the project and was invaluable in helping us to refine our research questions and gain access to key archives and individuals. Our MAG members were: SuAndi, Steve Dearden, Avril Heffernan, Peter Kalu, Paul J. King, Qaisra Shahraz and Mei Yuk Wong. Other members of Manchester's writing community who helped steer the project and its research focus, especially in the early days, included our two PhD students, Rajeev Balasubramanyam and Tariq Mehmood, Shamshad Khan, Zahid Hussain, Dominique Tessier, Ra Page, Vijay Medtia, Jane Mathieson, Libby Tempest and Shirley May. We bear a huge debt to all of them and extend our sincere thanks to both the individuals listed here and the groups and organizations they represent. Similarly, the project – and, as a consequence, this book – would not have happened had not we enjoyed the willing participation and support of all those writers and agency-workers who took part in our interviews and agreed to present their work on the Writers' Gallery. Individual names are, in this case, too numerous to mention but we thank you all and trust that your thoughts and contributions will take their place in history as part of the legacy of the project. The Writers' Gallery may be accessed at www.transcultural-writing.com/movingmanchester.

With respect to the production of this book, specifically, the authors would like to extend their thanks to both the commissioning editors and the production team at Manchester University Press. Sincere thanks, also, to Roger Bromley and the anonymous readers of the proposal and the final typescript: your advice has been invaluable. Lynne Pearce would also like to extend thanks to the following individuals (and organizations) for their help with the illustrations to Chapters 1 and 4: Shirley Baker (photographer); Jan Shearsmith (Museum of Science and Industry); Aidan O'Rourke (photographer); Jane Parr (Archives and Local Studies, Manchester City Council); Tee and Tony (exHulme website); Yvonne Seely (FotoLibra); Peter Kalu (Commonword); and Rick Gwilt and Ken Casey (ex-FED). A full list of permissions appears below. Meanwhile, Corinne Fowler extends thanks for the images in her chapters to Toby Madden and members of Young Identity. Still with images, the whole team is immensely grateful to the Manchester-based artist Michael Gutteridge, not only for supplying us with the image for this book's cover but also for the many dozens of beautiful representations of the city that he has allowed us to reproduce free of charge on our website and other publicity material during the life of the project.

Collectively, the authors would once again like extend their heartfelt thanks to Jo McVicker, our project administrator, whose loyalty and commitment well exceeded the call of duty and whose efforts in the months leading up to the conference was truly Herculean. Similarly, and as noted in the Preface, the project, and consequently this book, could not have happened without the amazing web design and IT support of Lee Horsley and her daughter, Kate. More recently we have benefited from the excellent editorial work of Sarah Post, a postgraduate student in the English Department, who provided us with several late entries for the e-catalogue, generally assisted with research in connection with the production of this book and created its index: many thanks for all your efforts, Sarah! In addition, and although he doesn't contribute to this particular 'output' in person, our co-researcher and creative writing colleague, Graham Mort, has been an absolutely crucial pillar to the project overall. Without his expertise and guidance in the field of creative writing (both as a published writer and as an academic), the project would have struggled to negotiate the delicate ground that lies between contemporary writing and research 'about' writing. On many occasions, his judgement and direction was invaluable.

Finally, our individual acknowledgements are as follows.

Lynne Pearce would like to thank Viv Tabner for her unflagging personal support and patience during the long years of the project and the production of this book as well as her practical help and support with the conference and impressive archive of Mancunian music! Also, she would like to acknowledge the good-humoured curiosity shown in both the project and the book from all her friends in the Robin's Nest Tearoom in Taynult, Scotland – including Vera Shaw's reminder that, at the risk of alienating some readers, Manchester United should get a mention! As a long-distance supporter of MUFC since she was sixteen, the city and its postcodes (M16 0RA) were seared on Lynne's consciousness several decades before 'Moving Manchester' was born.

Corinne Fowler would like to thank Lynne Pearce for being an inspirational leader and mentor. Thanks, also, to Graham Mort, for his influential and creative approach to the project and to Martin Halliwell, for fostering such a positive working environment in Corinne's subsequent place of work. Corinne would also like to thank her twin, Naomi Fowler, for her sincere interest and wise advice. Thanks also go to Corinne's father, Malcolm Fowler, and to her mother, Yvonne Fowler, for her unfailing encouragement and support. Corinne is grateful to her son, Rafael Lugo-Fowler, for his cheerful greeting upon her return home from work. Finally, heart-felt thanks are due to her partner, Jairo Lugo-Ocando, for his shrewdness and egalitarianism.

Robert Crawshaw would like to thank colleagues and friends in the Institute for Advanced Study at the University of Konstanz, in particular Professor Andreas Langenohl for securing his appointment as a research fellow in the Institute between January and July 2011 and to Nicole Falkenhayner for her insightful advice on the drafts of papers relating to the ‘Moving Manchester’ project presented at workshops before and during his fellowship.

Permissions

The authors would like to thank the following authors, artists and publishers for their kind permission to reproduce material in our volume as follows: extracts from Lynne Pearce’s chapter, ‘The Literary Response to Moss Side, Manchester: Fact or (Genre) Fiction?’, in Katharine Cockin (ed.) The Literary North (2012), Palgrave Macmillan, reproduced with permission of Palgrave Macmillan; the poem, ‘Englan no Muddercountry’ (1988) reproduced with permission of the author, John Lyons; the poem, ‘Black Sister’ (1989), reproduced with the permission of the author, Sundar Kanta Walker; substantive extracts from Seán Body’s long poem, Seasons (2003), reproduced with the permission of the author, Seán Body; substantive extracts from the novel Lick Shot (1993), reproduced with the permission of the author, Peter Kalu; the poem ‘True Grit’ by John Agard, reproduced with permission of Bloodaxe (Alternative Anthem: Selected Poems with Live DVD (Bloodaxe Books, 2009)).

In addition, we would like to thank the artist, Michael Gutteridge, for his permission to reproduce his painting ‘Tram in St. Peter’s Square No. 4’ (cover image); Manchester Museum of Science and Industry for its permission to reproduce an image of the painting, ‘A View of Manchester’ 1834’ in Chapter 1; FotoLibra, for its permission to reproduce John Cleare’s photograph ‘Manchester Redevelopment, February 1964’ in Chapter 1; the photographer Shirley Baker, for her permission to reproduce the photographs ‘Salford, 1962’ and ‘Salford, 1964’ in Chapter 1; exHulme website, for their permission to reproduce the photograph of ‘Salford Crescent, Balcony’ in Chapter 1; Manchester Local Image Collection (Manchester City Council (see www.images.manchester.gov.uk)) for its permission to reproduce the following photographs in Chapter 1: ‘Manchester Royal Exchange, 1874’, ‘Manchester Royal Exchange’, 1900; ‘Manchester Royal Exchange, following Bomb Damage, 1940’, ‘The Aftermath of the IRA Bomb, 1996’, ‘Castlefield Quay, by D. Brumhead, 1986’; the photographer Aidan O'Rourke, for his permission to reproduce the photograph, 'Merchant's Warehouse, Castlefield, 1998' in Chapter 1; Young Identity for their permission to reproduce an advertisement for one of their events in Chapter 2; the FED (Federation of Worker Writers and Community Publishers) for its permission to reproduce two cover images of its publications in Chapter 4; Commonword, for its permission to reproduce the following cover images in Chapter 4: Healing Strategies (1998), City Secrets (2002) and Hair (2006); Toby Madden for permission to reproduce his photograph of Lemn Sissay in Chapter 5.

Acknowledgements

Finally, we would like to thank all the interviewees cited in Chapter 6 (see key at end of chapter) for their permission to reproduce extracts from their interviews with Corinne Fowler.