Acknowledgements

WE WOULD LIKE TO THANK Dan Waters whose novel, Generation Dead inspired our use of the phrase ‘Open Graves, Open Minds’ in the title of the book and project. Dan has graciously allowed us to use this motto; his powerful, often funny, and moving novels explore with great intelligence many of the striking themes in fictions of the undead which have been explored throughout this project.

We are indebted to our families and friends for their support and to Bram Stoker for his legacy and inspiration. Sam would like to offer special thanks to Jonathan and to her father David George. A generous grant from SSAHRI at the University of Hertfordshire contributed to the costs of the book and its illustrations following the OGOM conference. We would like to express our gratitude to the University, to colleagues in Literature for their support and to Brandon Pazitka in Marketing for his work on the programmes and images for the conference and symposium.

Sam would like to acknowledge her appreciation of the artist David Reed, who inspired her discussion of vampire painting and who offered up a generous dialogue around vampires and non-reflection when she wrote to him explaining the project (like Harker at Castle Dracula, he entered freely and of his own will!). She is also indebted to John Rimmer, who introduced her to Reed and fired her discussion of aesthetics in relation to vampirism with his own work and commentary (it was a case of letting the right one in). She would like to thank the novelist Kim Newman for sharing his thoughts on the problem of photographing vampires which he continues to explore in his own writing; Stacey Abbott and Sir Christopher Frayling for their help with mirrors and shadows. She would also like to express her gratitude to Catherine Wynne for providing the perfect Gothic moment at the centenary, tracing Lucy's sleepwalking steps in Dracula and eating fish, chips and mushy peas in Whitby with Dacre Stoker and Sir Christopher Frayling!

We, and the book, owe a great deal to those members of OGOM who have been there from the beginning: Ivan Phillips, Stacey Abbott, Catherine Spooner and Marcus Sedgwick. Special thanks are due to Stacey for kindly helping with frame grabs. Marcus has been a regular visitor to UH, inspiring students with his work, and he even wrote a special story for the centenary, 'Bram Stoker: Vampire', which he generously gave to all the speakers.

We would like to acknowledge various members of the press who have invited us to contribute to discussions around the project: Lucy Tobin in The Guardian, Simon Midgley in The Times, Tim Stanton at The Sun, Javier Hernandez at The Wall Street Journal. Thanks also to our editor at Manchester University Press, Matthew Frost, for attending the OGOM conference and for offering his expertise and advice.

Many friends have given Bill support during this project, but he would particularly like to mention his friends Liz Fox, Martin Green, Sarah and Dave Bartlett, and Kevin Jones, who have also contributed much intellectual dialogue; Mel and Pete Duxbury have provided warm friendship, plus cat-sitting during conference attendance; his family – Barbara, Caryl and Bob Hughes – have also been extremely supportive. He wishes to acknowledge the memory of his father, Bernard Hughes, whose influence on him was paramount and, above all, to commemorate his mother, Barbara, who was supremely inspirational and will be painfully missed. Bill is grateful, too, for the intellectual encouragement given him by Avril Horner, Angela Keane and Hamish Mathison, and could hardly avoid celebrating Spike, whose inspirational biting and vampiric typewriting spurred the editing process.

This book is dedicated to the memory of Buffy and Angel, two little souls who touched Sam deeply, and to the 'Reading the Vampire' MA students at the University of Hertfordshire (Lindsey, Sam, Adam, Beverley, Louise, Jo, Khamis, Lisa, Li-Anne, Sam, Kristin, Minal, Jennifer), together with Jillian who is embarking on a PhD on vampire texts. Thank you for accompanying us on this journey. It means a lot.
