Acknowledgements

We have incurred many debts in the course of writing this book. We owe thanks to the Economic and Social Research Council for funding the project on which we report here (RES-000-22-2700). And in getting and administering the project, we depended greatly on the contribution of Rowena Burgess and Sarah Burbridge in the Arts and Humanities Research Office at the University of East Anglia. We are also immensely grateful to those who participated in our research. In particular, we wish to thank Dick Allen and the students of Bungay High School, Rebecca Bealey and the students of Norwich School for Girls, Duncan Joseph and the students of Wymondham High School, Gary Seal and Thea Abbott and the students of City of Norwich School, and Melissa Severn and the students of Chadwell Heath School. Others to whom we owe debts are Carole Bull, Stephen Coleman, Nicola Daines, Tim Dant, Charmain Desler, John Gordon, Alan Turkie and Liesbet van Zoonen. Earlier versions of some of the material included were delivered to audiences at conferences organised by the Centre for Research on Socio-Cultural Change; the International Communication Association; the Political Studies Association; the Media Education, Communication and Cultural Studies Association; and to the Schools of Film and Television Studies and Political, Social and International Studies at the University of East Anglia. We extend many thanks to Tony Mason and his colleagues at Manchester University Press for their support and help. Finally, we are grateful to our colleagues in our respective schools at the University of East Anglia and to those in media@uea, a network that extends across institutional and disciplinary boundaries.

Some of the following chapters draw on previously published papers. We would like to thank the editors and publishers of the following:

Martin Scott, Sanna Inthorn and John Street (2011) 'From Entertainment to Citizenship: A Comparative Study of the Political Uses of Popular Culture', International Journal of Cultural Studies, 14:5, 499–515.

John Street, Sanna Inthorn and Martin Scott (2012) 'Playing at Politics: Popular Culture and Political Engagement', Parliamentary Affairs, 65:2, 338–358.

Sanna Inthorn and John Street (2011) 'Simon Cowell for Prime Minister: Young Citizens' Attitudes Towards Celebrity Politics', Media, Culture and Society, 33:3, 479–489.

John Street and Sanna Inthorn (2010) "'You're an American Rapper, So What do you Know?'" The Political Uses of British and US Popular Culture by First-time Voters in the UK', New Political Science, 32:4, 471–484.