Notes on contributors

Kevin Adamson is Lecturer in the contemporary history of Europe at the University of Stirling. His research is focused on the comparative analysis of revolutions as well as the politics of the extreme right in Europe. He is currently involved in research and teaching as part of the University of Stirling's research programme in revolutions and counter-revolutions.

László Borhi is Visiting Professor in Hungarian history at Indiana University, Bloomington, Senior Research Fellow at the Institute of History, Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and Associate Professor at ELTE University, Budapest. He is currently working on a book Dealing with a Dictatorship: The United States and Hungary from 1941 to 1991. His publications include Hungary in the Cold War 1945–1956: Between the United States and the Soviet Union (2004).

Mary Buckley is currently Fellow and Director of Studies in Human, Social and Political Sciences at Hughes Hall, Cambridge. She is author or editor of ten books which include Women and Ideology in the Soviet Union (1989), Redefining Russian Society and Polity (1993) and Mobilizing Soviet Peasants (2006). Her current research is on human trafficking from and into Russia and on Russian policies on unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs), or drones.

Sergiu Florean is an occasional lecturer at the Faculty of Politics, Philosophy and Communications at the West University of Timișoara, Romania, where he teaches political sociology and revolutions. Since 2010, he has been the Director of Public Communications for the Resource Centre for Ethical and Solidarity Initiatives in Timișoara, a social foundation dedicated to the promotion of a social economy in Romania.

Peter Grieder is Lecturer in Twentieth-Century History at the University of Hull. His previous publications include The East German Leadership, 1946–1973: Conflict and Crisis (1999). His second book, The German Democratic Republic, appeared in 2012.

Tom Junes is Fellow at the Institut für die Wissenschaften vom Menschen in Vienna and visiting researcher at Warsaw University. He teaches Polish history at the Catholic University, Leuven (Belgium), and is currently working on a project on youth in the late Cold War era. His doctoral dissertation was concerned with a generational analysis of student politics in communist Poland.

James Krapfl teaches modern Central and Eastern European history at McGill University, Montreal. He is the author of several articles on the cultural history of the Czechoslovak revolution of 1989 and of the book Revolution with a Human Face: Politics, Culture and Community in Czechoslovakia, 1989–1992, forthcoming from Cornell University Press.

Artur Lipiński is Assistant Professor at the Faculty of Political Science and Journalism, Adam Mickiewicz University, Poznań, Poland. He is interested in the role of discourse in the construction of political identities in Poland. Among his other research interests are: Polish party politics and foreign policy, discourse analysis, social movements and the theory and sociology of memory.

Kevin McDermott is Senior Lecturer in Political History at Sheffield Hallam University. He is the author of Stalin: Revolutionary in an Era of War (2006) and co-editor of several volumes, including Stalinist Terror in Eastern Europe: Elite Purges and Mass Repression (2010) and Revolution and Resistance in Eastern Europe: Challenges to Communist Rule (2006) (both with Matthew Stibbe). He is currently writing a study of communist Czechoslovakia.

Holger Nehring is Reader in Contemporary History at the University of Sheffield. He has published widely on the history of peace and other social movements, most recently Politics of Security (2012). He has started work on a new project on the politics of peace in 1980s Germany.

Robin Okey is Emeritus Professor in the History Department of the University of Warwick with an interest in the history of nineteenth- and twentieth-century East Central Europe. Among his publications most relevant to the present theme are: Feudalism to Communism: Eastern Europe 1740–1985 (1986) and The Demise of Communist East Europe: 1989 in Context (2004).

Michal Pullmann teaches contemporary social history at Charles University, Prague, including the history of historiography, the theory and methodology of history and the history of communist dictatorships. He is the author of a book on Czechoslovak perestroika and the demise of communism: Konec experimentu: Přestavba a pád komunismu v Československu [The End of an Experiment: Perestroika and the Demise of Communism in Czechoslovakia] (2011).

Elena Simeonova is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Political Science, University of National and World Economy (UNWE), Sofia. She holds a PhD in Political Science from UNWE. The title of her doctoral thesis is ‘Models and Typology of Internal Political Crises: The Example of Bulgarian Transition’. She has published on political crises, conflict resolution, early warning systems and political risk management.

Matthew Stibbe is Professor of Modern European History at Sheffield Hallam University. He has published widely on the history of twentieth-century Germany, and is also joint editor, with Kevin McDermott, of two previous volumes of essays on post-1945 Eastern Europe: Revolution and Resistance in Eastern Europe: Challenges to Communist Rule (2006); and Stalinist Terror in Eastern Europe: Elite Purges and Mass Repression (2010). He is currently working on an AHRC-funded network project on women’s movements after the First World War with Ingrid Sharp of the University of Leeds.

Nikolai Vukov is Associate Professor at the Institute of Ethnology and Folklore Studies, Sofia, and has a doctorate in anthropology (2002) and a PhD in History (2005). His research interests include public commemorations, socialist monuments and post-socialist transformations in Eastern Europe. He is co-author (with Luca Ponchiroli) of Communism of Stone: Monuments in Bulgaria, 1944–1989: An Album (2011).