Acknowledgements

This book began life as a PhD dissertation. I am most grateful to my supervisor, Fearghal McGarry, for his sound advice and encouragement; and to Andrew R. Holmes, my co-supervisor, for the same reasons. Both have provided much-appreciated support. Thanks also to Sabine Wichert, who supervised my dissertation in first year, for her valuable input.

Thanks to staff from the Queen's University Belfast School of History and Anthropology for their encouragement including: David Hayton, Mary O'Dowd, Catherine Clinton, Paul Corthorn and Peter Gray. Thanks to Alvin Jackson, my thesis examiner, for his constructive criticisms, and ongoing support. I also thank Paul Bew, my internal examiner, for his valuable comments and suggestions. I also benefited from discussions with members of the Irish Politics Research Cluster at the Queen's University Belfast School of Politics, International Studies and Philosophy.

I am grateful to the following friends and colleagues who read draft chapters, making helpful comments and criticisms: Jessie Blackburn, Josephine Doody, Stuart Aveyard and James Greer. Elaine Farrell read all of it, in various incarnations, and I am grateful for her support over the years. I am also grateful to Kacper Rekawek for many years of support, advice and ongoing collaboration. The usual disclaimer applies.

For lively discussions about history and politics while completing the book, my thanks also to Sean Farrell, Gareth Mulvenna, Conor Browne, Marisa McGlinchey, Iosif Kovras and Neophytos Loizides. I must also mention my former office mates Raoul McLaughlin, Chris McCoubrey, Chris Loughlin, Aidan Enright, Matthew Lewis and Erica Doherty.

My thanks to everyone at Manchester University Press for all their work, assistance, and for showing faith in the project.

Many thanks to the staff at all the archives and libraries (listed in the bibliography) where I have researched – in particular Ross Moore at the Linen Hall Library. Thanks to colleagues at the Queen's University Belfast Institute of Governance for welcoming me there: Gemma Ní Chaoimh, Siobhán McAllister, Marie Lynch and especially to Phil Scraton for his support and encouragement.

Potential breach of my word limit prevents my mentioning everyone whose company I enjoyed during the writing of this book. Friends and colleagues from the past and present cohort of the Queen's University Belfast School of History and Anthropology, School of Politics, International Studies and Philosophy, and staff and students from the School of History and Archives, University College Dublin, all played their part – not to mention those from the Sonic Arts Research Centre, Guthrie House and the 'B-Siders'. You know who you are.

I must also name Vasileios Chatziioannou, Orestis Karamanlis, James Williams, Jose Argudo, Tej Pochiraju and Matthias Euler, who have all helped in various ways.

Thanks to all my friends and family in Donegal and further afield. Special thanks must, of course, go to my parents, John McDaid and Mary McDaid for all they have done for me; especially to Mary who proof-read the manuscript. And to Ania, for all her love, support and good humour throughout the writing process.

Shaun McDaid,
