ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Researching and writing this book has been an amazing experience for so many reasons. It pushed me as a researcher and it has changed me as a person. There are therefore many people, institutions and organisations that I must thank.

First I must thank all those who funded and provided services to facilitate my research. Thank you to the Faculty of Social and Behavioural Sciences and the School of History and International Relations at Flinders University, and the Australian Academy of the Humanities for various grants to make research trips to the UK, Cyprus and Turkey, for an (albeit short-lived) research assistant (thanks Iliya Marovich-Old), and to present my work at various conferences. I am also thankful to the late Dr Vangelis Kechriotis who invited me to be a Visiting Professor at Bogazici University in Istanbul in the European Summer of 2012. Not only was this a memorable experience for my family and me, it allowed me to access the Başbakanlık Osmanlı Arşivleri (Office of the Prime Minister Ottoman Archives). I must thank the staff of the numerous archives, museums and libraries I visited for assisting me with my research: the National Archives of the UK, Kew, London; The British Library, London; the Imperial War Museum, London; the State Archives, Nicosia; the Başbakanlık Osmanlı Arşivleri in Istanbul; and last but not least the Flinders University Library, especially document delivery staff.

I am also thankful to the many historians and scholars from other disciplines for listening patiently whenever I explained my project, for their encouragement and their thoughts and comments. The following names are listed in no particular order: Tim Reardon, Ann Matters, Evan Smith, Rolandos Katsiaounis, Panikos Panayi, Michael J. K. Walsh, Joy Damousi, Nicholas Doumanis, John M. MacKenzie, Mete Hatay, Tabitha Morgan, Mehmet Polatel, Nicholas Coureas, Hubert Faustmann, Christopher Schabel, Costas M. Constantinou, Vangelis Kehriotis, Selim Deringil, Christalla Yakinthou, Michalis N. Michael, Eric S. Richards, Matt Fitzpatrick, Peter Monteath, David Lockwood, Melanie Oppenheimer, Catherine Kevin, Brian Dickey, Lance Brennan, David Close, Ian Copland, Giuseppe Finaldi, Trevor Harris, Klearchos Kyriakides, Yiannis Papadakis, Gareth Knapman, Erdem Erginel, Mehmet Erginel, Richard Scully, Alexis Rappas, John Connor, Marios Shammass, Roger Christofides, Jay Winter, Hew Strachan, Alison Fletcher, Peter Stanley, Malcolm Cook and Martin

Griffiths. I also thank the anonymous reviewers for their helpful suggestions.

I must also thank the conferences who accepted my papers on the Cypriot Mule Corps and the people who attended my various presentations at (1) 'And this island: who knows it?' Cypriot Identities across Millennia, University of Nicosia, Cyprus, 7–9 September 2012; (2) public talk at Kochinohorka Lyceum, 26 September 2012; (3) Flinders History Seminar Series, 2 November 2012; (4) Imperial Faultlines, 23rd meeting of the Australasian Association for European History (AAEH), Victoria University of Wellington, 2–5 July 2013; and (5) Perspectives on the 'Great' War, Queen Mary, University of London, 1–4 August 2014. Thanks to Michael J.K. Walsh for our collaboration and friendship which allowed us to organise The British Empire during the Great War: Colonial Societies / Cultural Responses conference at Nanyang Technological University, 19–22 February 2014, which also allowed me to present on the Cypriot muleteers.

Working with Manchester University Press on this, my third book with them, has been, once again, amazing. Thank you to all the staff and especially to Emma Brennan and the series editors for their support.

Researching and writing a book of this nature means sacrifices and help from family. First I thank my extended family for their help in Cyprus and the UK, which facilitated my research in those places, especially to my brother-in-law Michael Komodromou for his help in both the UK and Cyprus with matters of accommodation. I want to thank my father, Varnavas Michael Varnava, father-in-law, Christos Nicholas Komodromou, and his brother-in-law, Antoni Pitrakkou, for answering various questions about what they knew of the Cypriot Mule Corps. Finally, but by no means least, I want to especially thank my wife Helen Komodromou-Varnava and our son Barnabas and baby daughter Maria. Although I have juggled many projects, small and large, during the last five years, the Cypriot Mule Corps has dominated my focus. It was certainly not easy for either Helen to listen to the stories of the Corps or for Barnabas, Maria and Helen to share their spare time with it. I thank them for their patience, understanding and love.

Lastly, I must thank the men who served in the Cypriot Mule Corps. I hope this book will lead to the recognition that you deserve and your rightful place in the memory of all Cypriots.
