Notes on contributors

Jonathan Baldo is Professor of English in the Eastman School of Music, the University of Rochester. His most recent publication, Memory in Shakespeare's Histories: Stages of Forgetting in Early Modern England (Routledge, 2012), was nominated for the Renaissance Society of America's 2013 Phyllis Goodhart Gordan Book Prize. His essays on Shakespeare have appeared in a wide range of journals and collections, including Shakespeare Quarterly, Renaissance Drama, English Literary Renaissance, Borrowers and Lenders, Criticism, and Modern Language Quarterly.

Mary A. Blackstone is a freelance dramaturg, cultural historian, and educator. She is Professor Emerita in the Theatre Department at the University of Regina and Director of the SSHRC-funded Saskatchewan Partnership for Arts Research as well as of the Centre for the Study of Script Development. She has published on the role of performers and public performance in the negotiation of shared values and identity in early modern England, and is currently working on a book entitled The Performance of Commonwealth in Early Modern England.

Alexandra M. Block is a lecturer at the University of California, Merced, and author of Sacramental Semiotics: John Donne and the Early Modern Eucharistic Controversy (BiblioBazaar, 2011).

Brooke Conti is Associate Professor of English at Cleveland State University. She is the author of Confessions of Faith in Early Modern England (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2014) and is co-editing a new edition of Thomas Browne's Religio Medici as part of Oxford University Press's Complete Works of Thomas Browne. She is currently at work on a second monograph, tentatively entitled Religious Nostalgia from Shakespeare to Milton.

Joel M. Dodson is Assistant Professor of English at Southern Connecticut State University in New Haven, Connecticut. He has published on Sir Philip Sidney's Defence of Poesy and doctrinal harmonies, and is currently at work on a book on confessionalization, ecclesiology, and late Reformation English poetics, from Sidney to Donne.

Phebe Jensen, Professor of English at Utah State University, is the author of Religion and Revelry in Shakespeare's Festive World (Cambridge University Press, 2009), and a series of essays on popular religious culture and early modern Catholicism. She is currently completing a reference book, The Early Modern English Calendar, and at work on a longer-term book project, Shakespeare's Clocks and Calendars.

Isabel Karremann is Professor of English Literature at the University of Würzburg, Germany. Her study The Drama of Memory in Shakespeare's History Plays (Cambridge University Press, 2015) was shortlisted for the Shakespeare Globe Book Award 2016. She has co-edited the collections Forgetting Faith? Negotiating Confessional Conflict in Early Modern Europe (de Gruyter, 2012) and Shakespeare in Cold War Europe: Conflict, Commemoration, Celebration (Palgrave, 2015), and is currently working on a project on conflict and conciliation in the Thirty Years War.

James R. Macdonald teaches in the English Department and the interdisciplinary Humanities program at the University of the South in Sewanee, Tennessee. He is also the author of recent essays on Marlowe's Doctor Faustus and Book I of Spenser's Faerie Queene.

Thomas J. Moretti is Assistant Professor of English at Iona College, New York and editor of The Shakespeare Newsletter. His scholarly interests include religion and gender in early modern English drama and temporality in early modern English theater. His writings on religious mediation, gender performance, and theater have appeared in the journals Renascence and Renaissance Drama.

Christina Wald is Professor of English Literature at the University of Konstanz, Germany. Her research focuses on contemporary drama, performance, film and TV; early modern drama and prose fiction; and gender and feminist theory. She is the author of Hysteria, Trauma and Melancholia: Performative Maladies in Contemporary Anglophone Drama (Palgrave, 2007) and The Reformation of Romance: The Eucharist, Disguise and Foreign Fashion in Early Modern Prose Fiction (de Gruyter, 2014) and co-editor of The Literature of Melancholia: Early Modern to Postmodern (Palgrave, 2011).

Brian Walsh is the author of Shakespeare, the Queen's Men, and the Elizabethan Performance of History (Cambridge University Press, 2009), as well as Unsettled Toleration: Religious Difference on the Shakespearean Stage (Oxford University Press, 2016). He has edited a collection of essays on The Revenger's Tragedy for The Arden Critical Guides series, and has authored several articles and essays on early modern drama. He has taught at the University of Illinois, Rutgers University, and Yale University. He currently teaches at Boston University.

Richard Wilson is an internationally acclaimed literary critic and Shakespeare scholar. Having taught at the University of Lancaster, Cardiff University, and the Sorbonne, he now holds an Anniversary Chair at Kingston University, London. Among his recent books are Free Will: Art and Power on Shakespeare's Stage (Manchester University Press, 2013) and Worldly Shakespeare: The Theatre of Our Good Will (Edinburgh University Press, 2016).

Jacqueline Wylde is a PhD candidate at the University of Toronto. Her areas of research include early modern drama and popular religious culture in post-Reformation England. Her dissertation, 'Moving Graces: Modes of Religious Persuasion on the Early Modern Stage', explores how persuasive strategies depicted on and deployed by the stage may be read as emerging from a religious, though multi-confessional, culture of persuasion.