Alan Fowler taught Economic and Social History at the Manchester Polytechnic/Manchester Metropolitan University for 40 years. He has written on the history of the Lancashire cotton operatives and their trade unions, including Lancashire Cotton Operatives and Work (2003). He and Mike Rose collaborated as co-organisers of the Economic History Society and Social History Society conferences in Manchester in 1991 and 2002.

Martin Hewitt is Pro Vice Chancellor and Dean of the Faculty of Arts, Law and Social Sciences at Anglia Ruskin University. His publications include The Emergence of Stability in the Industrial City, Manchester 1832–67 (1995), The Diaries of Samuel Bamford, 1858–61 (edited with Robert Poole, 2000) and The Dawn of the Cheap Press in Victorian Britain (2014). From his time as a postgraduate student research of Victorian Manchester in the 1980s, to his more recent role as Head of History at Manchester Metropolitan University, his work has been enriched by Mike Rose's published scholarship and personal support and encouragement.

Alan Kidd is Emeritus Professor of History at Manchester Metropolitan University. Having completed both masters and doctoral theses under the supervision of Mike Rose, he continued to benefit from Mike's advice and guidance in the years that followed. He has published books and articles on various aspects of British social history especially poverty, charity and social welfare and the history of Manchester.

Alistair Mutch is Professor of Information and Learning at Nottingham Trent University. Having studied nineteenth-century rural Lancashire under the supervision of Mike Rose for his PhD, he has managed, after working on aspects of organisation theory, to work his way back to the study of history. Via the study of Liverpool pubs he has arrived at eighteenth-century church governance: his Religion and National Identity: Governing Scottish Presbyterianism in the Eighteenth Century, is published by Edinburgh University Press.

Dilwyn Porter studied history at the University of Manchester in the 1960s and considers himself very fortunate to have been taught by Mike Rose. Later, when teaching at the University of Worcester, Dil and his colleagues benefited enormously from Mike's advice and support as their external examiner. His research has focused on the history of financial journalism, the history of mail-order retailing and also on the social and cultural history of sport. He has recently retired from his post as Professor of Sports History and Culture at De Montfort University but remains an active researcher, reviewer and writer. Dil is a past editor of the journal Sport in History and is currently working on Amateur Football in England: A Social and Cultural History (Peter Lang) and English Gentlemen and World Football: The Corinthians, c. 1880–1939 (Ashgate).

Peter Shapely is Senior Lecturer in contemporary British History and Head of the School of History, Welsh History and Archaeology at Bangor University. For his PhD, he worked on governance and voluntary charities in nineteenth-century Manchester, under the supervision of Alan Kidd with Mike Rose as second supervisor. He then worked on policy, governance and twentieth-century housing and was given further valuable help and support from Mike (even though he's an Alty fan and Peter has always supported Stalybridge Celtic). His publications include The Politics of Housing: Power, Consumers and Urban Culture (Manchester University Press, 2007). He is currently completing a monograph on urban deprivation and the state, 1967–79, to be published by Ashgate.

Melanie Tebbutt is Professor of History at Manchester Metropolitan University, where Mike Rose's association with the Friends of the Manchester Centre for Regional History, as chair of the Centre's Friends' group, spanned more than a decade. Her most recent publications are Being Boys: Youth Leisure and Identity in the Inter-war Years, published in paperback by Manchester University Press in 2014 and Making Youth, A History of Youth in Modern Britain, Palgrave Macmillan, 2016.

Pat Thane is Research Professor in Contemporary History, Kings College, London. Her publications include: The Foundations of the Welfare State (2nd edn, 1996); Old Age in English History. Past Experiences, Present Issues (2000); The Long History of Old Age (edn, 2005); Women and Citizenship in Britain and Ireland in the Twentieth Century. What Difference Did the Vote Make? (edited with Esther Breitenbach, 2010); Sinners? Scroungers? Saints? Unmarried Motherhood in Twentieth Century England (with Tanya Evans, 2012). She succeeded Mike Rose as Chair of the Social History Society, 2001–8.

Terry Wyke teaches social and economic history at Manchester Metropolitan University. When he first heard Mike Rose speak in the early 1970s, his understanding of and feeling for the literature and language of the Victorians were obvious, as was the time he took to offer research guidance to a young scholar. Mike has remained ever helpful, not least to those beyond the walls of the university – a beacon and barometer for historians.
