Acknowledgements

All books, particularly edited collections, owe debts of gratitude. This edited collection emerged from the activities and interactions of the Identity Research Network (IRN), which we established in 2014 at Swinburne University in Melbourne, Australia. The IRN brings together a wide range of interdisciplinary research around the theme of identity through monthly seminars and collaborations. In December 2014 the IRN organised a workshop, several papers of which appear in this edited collection. We thank all IRN members in contributing to the network's development and for their incisive and excellent engagement.

This edited collection has very much been a collaborative effort by all involved. We would like to thank the authors for giving their work and time for this project and, in many cases, for agreeing to review chapters. Thanks are also due to Helen Berents and Sarah Smith for their exemplary organisational assistance with the IRN's activities. Sarah also helped to speed the progress of the book with her editorial assistance, for which we were extremely grateful. This book would also not have been possible without the research and funding support received from Swinburne's Faculty of Health, Arts and Design's Research Development Grant Scheme. The Swinburne Institute for Social Research and the Department of Education and Social Sciences also provided assistance and funding support for our activities. The editorial team at Manchester University Press have provided exceptional guidance and enthusiasm for this project and we have been extremely grateful for their support.
