CONTRIBUTORS

Caio Simões de Araújo holds a BA in International Relations, and minor in Sociology, from the University of Coimbra, Portugal. He obtained an MA in Sociology and Social Anthropology from the Central European University, Hungary. He is currently pursuing a PhD at the International History Department of the Graduate Institute for International and Development Studies, Switzerland. He has conducted research in different areas of interest in both Brazil and Portugal and has presented his work at academic conferences in Brazil, Europe, India, and South Africa. His research interests involve histories of colonialism and decolonisation, historical anthropologies, anthropology of the body, anthropology of development, history of racism and racial ideologies, and post-colonial studies.

Walter Bruchhausen, Priv.-Doz. Dr med., Dipl. theol., MPhil, is Vice-Director of the Institute for the History of Medicine, University of Bonn, and Research Fellow at the Institute for the History, Theory and Ethics of Medicine, University of Aachen. He has done studies in medicine, theology, philosophy of medicine/health care ethics and anthropology at Bonn, Würzburg, and Glasgow; medical work in Germany and East Africa (1990–97); and habilitation for 'History, Anthropology and Ethics of Medicine' (2004) with field and archival research in Tanzania on 'Past and Present Medical Pluralism in Southeastern Tanzania' (2000–4). He is currently researching the 'History of German Development Cooperation in Health'. He has also published on 'traditional', colonial, and mission medicine in East Africa, development and emergency assistance, religion and medicine, cultural and anthropological historiography of medicine, and global health ethics.

Barbara Bush is an Emeritus Professor of History at Sheffield Hallam University, UK. She is the author of Imperialism and Postcolonialism (Harlow: Pearson 2006), 'Gender and Empire: The Twentieth Century', in Philippa Levine (ed.), Gender and Empire (Oxford: Oxford University Press 2004), and Imperialism, Race and Resistance: Africa and Britain, 1919–1945 (London: Routledge 1999). She also has a number of key publications on gender, culture, and resistance in slave and post-slave societies in the African diaspora. Her current research focuses on the academic social sciences, colonial research, and development in the late colonial era.

CONTRIBUTORS

Cláudia Castelo is a Research Fellow at Centro Interuniversitário de História das Ciências e da Tecnologia, Faculdade de Ciências, Universidade de Lisboa, Lisbon, Portugal. She graduated in History in 1992 and concluded her MA in History of the Twentieth Century in 1997 (both degrees at the Universidade Nova de Lisboa, Lisbon, Portugal). She holds a PhD in Social Sciences from the Instituto de Ciências Sociais, Universidade de Lisboa, Lisbon, Portugal (2005). Currently, she coordinates the project 'Field Scientists in the "Luso-tropical Setting": Knowledge, Ideology and Governance in Late Portuguese Empire'. Her research interests include the history of the Portuguese Colonial Empire in the twentieth century, white settlement in Angola and Mozambique, and 'colonial science'. She is the author of 'O modo português de estar no mundo: o luso-tropicalismo e a ideologia colonial portuguesa, 1933–1961' (Porto: Afrontamento 1998); 'Passagens para África: o povoamento de Angola e Moçambique com naturais da metrópole, 1920–1974' (Porto: Afrontamento 2007); and 'Scientific Research and Portuguese Colonial Policy: Developments and Articulations, 1936–1974', História, Ciências, Saúde – Manguinhos (2012).

Françoise Dufour is a researcher in linguistics at Montpellier 3, University Paul Valéry, France. She specialises in discourse analysis. Her research involves the analysis of discursive modalities of French colonial dominance over West Africa and its reformulations into development discourses. More generally she analyses the links between discourse, language, notions, and ideology. She is the author of De l'idéologie coloniale à celle du développement: une analyse du discours (Paris: L'Harmattan 2010) and 'Développement durable, humain: la cohérence des contradictions', Mots (2011).

Billy Frank is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Education and Social Science at the University of Central Lancashire (UCLan), UK. His doctoral thesis examined Britain's colonial development policy in Central and Southern Africa in the trans-World War Two period with special reference to Barclays Bank (Dominion, Colonies and Overseas). He is currently researching the lives and careers of empire bankers, developers, and 'experts' in post-1945 Southern Africa. He has co-edited The British Labour Movement and Imperialism (Newcastle: Cambridge Scholars 2010).

Joseph M. Hodge is an Associate Professor of Modern British and British Imperial History in the Department of History at West Virginia University in Morgantown, West Virginia, USA. He is author of Triumph of the Expert: Agrarian Doctrines of Development and the Legacies of British Colonialism (Athens, OH: Ohio University Press 2007). He is also co-editor along with Brett Bennett of Science and Empire: Knowledge and Networks of Science across the British Empire, 1800–1970 (Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan 2011). He has published several articles in leading historical journals including the Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History, the Journal of Southern African Studies, Agricultural History, and the Journal of Modern European History. He is currently researching the post-colonial careers of British colonial officers who worked subsequently for various international organisations after retiring from the colonial service, including the United Nations and the World Bank, or else for British donor agencies and consultancy firms.

CONTRIBUTORS

Gerald Hödl is a historian who has published several books and articles on development theory, Austrian foreign policy and development assistance, and on global sports. From 2001 to 2009, he taught extensively on these subjects at the University of Vienna's development studies programme. From 2009 to 2012 he was a member of the research project 'Colonial Concepts of Development, 1920–1960' at the Department of African Studies, University of Vienna, funded by the Austrian Science Fund. His publications include Österreich und die Dritte Welt: Außen- und Entwicklungspolitik der Zweiten Republik bis zum EU-Beitritt 1995 (Vienna: Promedia 2004). He has also translated books by Immanuel Wallerstein and Andre Gunder Frank into German.

Emma Hunter has been a Lecturer in History and Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, since 2008. Her current book project is called 'Languages of Freedom: Making Tanzanian Political Society in an International Age'. Major publications include "'Our Common Humanity": Print, Power and the Colonial Press in Interwar Tanganyika and French Cameroun', Journal of Global History (2012) and 'Dutiful Subjects, Patriotic Citizens and the Concept of "Good Citizenship" in Twentieth-Century Tanzania', Historical Journal (2013). She is also working on a new project, funded by the British Academy, called 'Concepts of Democracy in Mid-Twentieth-Century Africa'.

Martina Kopf, PhD, is a researcher and Lecturer in African Literature Studies at the University of Vienna. Her current research is on development discourse in Francophone and Anglophone twentieth-century colonial literature on and from Africa. From 2009 to 2012 she was a member of the research project 'Colonial Concepts of Development, 1920–1960' at the Department of African Studies, University of Vienna. She is the author of Trauma und Literatur: Das Nicht-Erzählbare erzählen – Assia Djebar und Yvonne Vera (Frankfurt-on-Main: Brandes & Apse 2005) and 'The Ethics of Fiction: African Writers on the Genocide in Rwanda', Journal of Literary Theory (2012).

CONTRIBUTORS

Juhani Koponen was Professor of Development Studies at the University of Helsinki until his retirement in 2012. As emeritus, he continues teaching and researching. A historian by training, his main research interest is the history of development and developmentalism, with the long-term development history of Tanzania and the formation of Finnish development policy as the main empirical cases. He has published on Tanzanian history – for example Development for Exploitation. German Colonial Policies in Mainland Tanzania, 1884–1914 (Helsinki, Hamburg: Lit 1994), and on development issues elsewhere, such as in Nepal, and has led several major research projects on different aspects of development. He has also undertaken commissioned research on topical development policy issues and participates actively in development policy discussions.

E. Kushinga Makombe is Lecturer in the Department of Economic History at the University of Zimbabwe, where he teaches courses on the economic history of Zimbabwe, Southern Africa, and East Africa as well as the development of economic thought. He has been a member of the department since 2003 beginning as a Graduate Teaching Assistant. Makombe earned his BA and MA degrees from the University of Zimbabwe, and he recently received his doctorate degree from the University of Witwatersrand in South Africa in 2013. His doctoral research focused on the history of rural-urban interaction in colonial Zimbabwe, conceptualising rural immigrants to the city as agents operating in a social field that extends beyond the rural-urban divide. Makombe has strong interests in the role of human agency in the economy and his research focus includes: agrarian, gender, labour histories, post-colonialism and development discourses.

Céline Pessis is currently preparing her PhD dissertation in the history of science and technology on rural development knowledge, experts and politics in West Africa from 1945 to the 1970s, at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales/Centre A. Koyré, Paris. She is also interested in environmental discourses and movements in mainland France and the African colonies. She has co-edited, with Christophe Bonneuil and Sezin Topçu, Une autre histoire des 'Trente Glorieuses': modernisation, alertes environnementales et contestations du 'progrès' dans la France d'après-guerre, 1945–1968 (Paris: La Découverte 2013).

Walter Schicho is the retired Chair of African History at the Department of African Studies, University of Vienna. His fields of research and teaching include African contemporary history, global history, development studies, North-South relations and inter-cultural communication. He was director of the research projects 'Colonial Concepts of Development' and 'Plurilingual Speakers in Unilingual Environments' (the latter jointly with Brigitta Busch). His publications include Handbuch Afrika (3 vols, Frankfurt: Brandes & Apsel; Vienna: Südwind 1999–2004) and Geschichte Afrikas (Stuttgart: Theiss 2010).

CONTRIBUTORS

Sven M. Speek has studied history and philosophy at the Ludwig-Maximilians-University of Munich. His current research as a doctoral candidate in environmental history at Ruhr University Bochum focuses on the intertwined histories of science and empire in colonial sub-Saharan Africa. He is particularly concerned with the histories of ecology and soil science.

Uyilawa Usuanlele, PhD, had his academic education in Nigeria, Sweden, and Canada, concentrating on African history. He worked as a researcher and administrator with the National Council for Arts and Culture, Nigeria. He was a founding member and Coordinator of the Institute for Benin Studies, Benin City, Nigeria. He is a recipient of the Swedish International Development Fellowship award and has presented papers at conferences in Africa, Europe, and the Americas. He has contributed articles and chapters to journals and books. He presently teaches African History at State University of New York (SUNY) Oswego, New York State, USA.

Iolanda Vasile holds a BA in Portuguese and Japanese Studies from the Faculty of Foreign Languages of the University of Bucharest, Romania. She is currently a PhD candidate at the Centre for Social Studies (CES) of the Faculty of Economics of the University of Coimbra, Portugal, in the programme 'Postcolonialisms and Global Citizenship'. In 2012, she was an exchange student at the Centre for African Studies at the University of São Paulo, Brazil, and currently is a tutor for an e-learning course on post-colonialisms for the Latin American Council of Social Sciences (CLACSO). She is also working as a research assistant in a project carried out by CES on the Portuguese Colonial War.