Preface and acknowledgements

THIS collection is founded on an intellectual and organisational collaboration with Patricia Pender and Rosalind Smith. Together with Paul Salzman, we ran a conference on early modern women and poetry which was held by the London Renaissance Seminar in 2009. The conference was partly funded by the Australian Research Council's Network for Early European Research. Linda Grant, Kate Lilley and Michelle O'Callaghan also made important contributions at and after the conference. The essays here are not papers from that conference but stem from post-conference discussion, and Patricia Pender and Rosalind Smith have made very substantial intellectual contributions to thinking through the question of women and the poem. I want to acknowledge a substantial debt to their thinking and participation at all stages of the project.

At Manchester University Press the collection benefited from review by two challenging and precise readers and we have tried to respond to their excellent advice. We are grateful to Kim Walker for first taking on the project, and to Matthew Frost for commissioning the project and for grace and patience in the final stages. Above all, Ralph Footring, the production editor, brought the volume into shape with speed, precision and good humour, for which all the contributors are grateful.
