Notes on contributors

CHRIS BUTLER is currently an Associate Lecturer at Sheffield Hallam University; his PhD (completed at Sheffield Hallam University, 2012) explored relations between religion, cognition and author-function in works by Sir Edward Dyer, Saint Robert Southwell, Thomas Lodge and Shakespeare. Chris Butler's published scholarly works include an article on connections between As You Like It and the second Earl of Essex's Irish campaign of 1599 (forthcoming in Celtic Shakespeare, eds Rory Vincent Loughnane and Willy Maley); an article on the religious meaning of Dyer's lyric poem 'Hee That His Mirth Hath Loste', in New Perspectives on Tudor Cultures, eds Mike Pincombe and Zsolt Almási (2012); the entry on As You Like It for the Facts on File Companion to Shakespeare (2012) and a short note on pricking in The Faerie Queene (Notes and Queries), (2008).

ANNALIESE CONNOLLY is Senior Lecturer in English at Sheffield Hallam University. Recent publications include 'Guy of Warwick, Godfrey of Bouillon, and Elizabethan Repertory' in Early Modern England and Islamic Worlds, eds Linda McJannet and Bernadette Andrea (2011), the entry for George Peele in The Encyclopedia of English Renaissance Literature (2011) and a chapter on the performance history of Middleton's Women Beware Women in Middleton: Women Beware Women (2011). Her current project is a monograph on George Peele.

ALEXANDRA GAJDA is John Walsh Fellow and Tutor at Jesus College, Oxford University. Her monograph, The Earl of Essex and Late Elizabethan Political Culture was published in 2012. Other publications include: 'The State of Christendom: History, Political Thought and the Essex Circle', Historical Research 81 (August 2008); 'Debating War and Peace in Late Elizabethan England', Historical Journal 52 (2009), pp. 851–878; 'Tacitus and Political Thought in Early Modern Europe, c.1530–c.1640', in The Cambridge Companion to Tacitus, ed. A. J. Woodman (2009); 'Education as a Courtier', in The Oxford Handbook to John Donne, eds J. Shami, T. Hester and D. Flynn (2009).

HUGH GAZZARD has held several posts at Oxford, and currently lectures in English at St Hugh's College. His doctoral thesis was about the networks of patronage (literary, cultural, political, religious, military) around the Earl of Essex. He now pursues broad research interests within early modern literature, especially poetry and drama.

ANDREW GORDON lectures in Literature at the University of Aberdeen where he is also Co-Director of the Centre for Early Modern Studies. He is the author of Writing Early Modern London: Memory, Text and Community (2013) and has edited several collections including Literature, Mapping and the Politics of Space in Early Modern Britain, with Bernhard Klein (2001), and The Arts of Remembrance in Early Modern England with Thomas Rist (2013). His work on the manuscript culture of early modern England has included studies of the letters of the Earl of Essex, Francis Bacon, John Donne and the culture of libels and has been published in ELR, Journal of Medieval and Early Modern Studies, and in various collections. He is currently involved in a collaborative project with James Daybell under the rubric Cultures of Correspondence in Early Modern Britain.

ANDREW HISCOCK is Professor of English at Bangor University, AHRC Research Fellow 2011–12 and a Fellow of the English Association. He has published widely on early modern literature and his most recent monograph is Reading Memory in Early Modern Literature (2011). Other publications include The Uses of this World: Thinking Space in Shakespeare, Marlowe, Cary and Jonson (2004) and an edited critical collection entitled Middleton: Women Beware Women (2011). He edited the double issue of the MHRA's 2008 Yearbook of English Studies devoted to Tudor literature, and is co-editor with Lisa Hopkins of the Continuum Renaissance Drama Series. He is English Editor for MLR.

LISA HOPKINS is Professor of English at Sheffield Hallam University and co-editor of Shakespeare, the journal of the British Shakespeare Association. Her recent publications include Shakespeare's The Tempest: The Relationship Between Text and Film (2008) and Goddesses and Queens: The Iconography of Elizabeth I, co-edited with Annaliese Connolly (2007).

GRACE IOPPOLO is Professor of Shakespearean and Early Modern Drama in the Department of English Literature at the University of Reading. She is the Founder and Director of the Henslowe-Alleyn Digitisation Project (www.henslowe-alleyn.org.uk) and an elected Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London. She is the author of Revising Shakespeare (1991) and Dramatists and their Manuscripts in the Age of Shakespeare, Jonson, Middleton and Heywood: Authorship, Authority and the Playhouse (2006), as well as numerous scholarly articles on early modern manuscripts, including the letters of Robert Devereux, 2nd Earl of Essex, and his sister Penelope Rich. With Peter Beal she is the co-editor of Elizabeth I and the Culture of Writing (2007). She edited King Lear and Measure for Measure for the Norton Critical Series and Hengist, King of Kent and The Honest Man's Fortune for the Malone Society. She is the General Editor of the 10-volume The Collected Works of Thomas Heywood (forthcoming).

CHRIS LAOUTARIS was awarded a prestigious Birmingham Fellowship at the Shakespeare Institute in 2013. Before that he lectured at University College London, where he was Renaissance Literature Course Convener. He is author of Shakespearean Maternities: Crises of Conception in Early Modern England (2008) and Shakespeare and the Countess: The Battle that Gave Birth to the Globe (2014), which was awarded a British Academy Post-Doctoral Fellowship and short-listed for the Tony Lothian Prize (sponsored by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch). He is contributor to Performing Maternity in Early Modern England (2007) and Performing Pedagogy: Gender and Instruction in Early Modern England (2011), edited by Kathryn M. Moncrief and Kathryn R. McPherson. He has also published a survey of activist female translators and historical writers in History of British Women's Writing: 1500–1610 (2010), edited by Caroline Bicks and Jennifer Summit. Laoutaris is currently working on two articles which reveal the mysterious female subjects of well-known Renaissance portraits for the British Art Journal; a study of early modern Robotics and Artificial Life; and a project for the Shakespeare Institute called Team Shakespeare: The First Folio and the Men who Created the Shakespeare Legacy (forthcoming).

WILLY MALEY is Professor of Renaissance Studies at the University of Glasgow. He is the author of A Spenser Chronology (1994); Salvaging Spenser: Colonialism, Culture and Identity (1997); and Nation, State and Empire in English Renaissance Literature: Shakespeare to Milton (2003). He is editor, with Andrew Hadfield, of A View of the Present State of Ireland: From the First Published Edition (1997). He has also edited eight collections of essays: with Brendan Bradshaw and Andrew Hadfield, Representing Ireland: Literature and the Origins of Conflict, 1534–1660 (1993); with Bart Moore-Gilbert and Gareth Stanton, Postcolonial Criticism (1997); with David J. Baker, British Identities and English Renaissance Literature (2002); with Andrew Murphy, Shakespeare and Scotland (2004); with Alex Benchimol, Spheres of Influence: Intellectual and Cultural Publics from Shakespeare to Habermas (2006); with Philip Schwyzer, Shakespeare and Wales: From the Marches to the Assembly (2010); with Michael Gardiner, The Edinburgh Companion to Muriel Spark (2010); and with Margaret Tudeau-Clayton, This England, That Shakespeare: New Angles on Englishness and the Bard (2010).

MARY PARTRIDGE received her doctorate from the University of Birmingham in 2008. She was awarded the Royal Historical Society's Alexander Prize for 2007. Publications include 'Thomas Hoby's Translation of Castiglione's Book of the Courtier', Historical Journal 50 (2007), p. 769; 'Lord Burghley and il Cortegiano: Models of Courtliness in Elizabethan England', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 6th series 19 (December 2009), pp. 95–116; and 'A "surprising shock" in the Cathedral: getting Year 7 to Vocalise Responses to the Murder of Thomas Becket', Teaching History 143 (June 2011), pp. 22–31. She is currently working as a teacher of history at Solihull School.

LINDA SHENK is Associate Professor at Iowa State University. Her publications include Learned Queen: The Image of Elizabeth I in Politics and Poetry (2010) as well as articles on Elizabeth I, the Earl of Essex, John Lyly, and Elizabethan university drama. She is currently working on a monograph examining the intersection of drama and diplomatic culture in late sixteenth-century England.

MATTHEW STEGGLE is Professor of English at Sheffield Hallam University. His publications include Richard Brome: Place and Politics on the Caroline Stage (2004); Laughing and Weeping in Early Modern Theatres (2007); and Volpone: A Critical Guide (2011). He is a Contributing Editor to Richard Brome Online (2010) and to The Cambridge Works of Ben Jonson (2012). His current project is a monograph on Gervase Markham.

RICHARD J. WOOD is an Associate Lecturer in the English Department at Sheffield Hallam University, where he recently completed his doctorate on Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia. He is the author of journal articles on Sidney's Arcadia in the Sidney Journal and Early Modern Literary Studies, and has contributed an essay on Sidney to a forthcoming collection on maternity in early modern romance, edited by Naomi Miller and Karen Bamford. He is also the author of the chapters on Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis and The Rape of Lucrece in The Facts on File Companion to Shakespeare (2012), the entry on Shakespeare's poetry in The Year's Work in English Studies, and the biographical essay on Mary Sidney (the Countess of Pembroke) in The Literary Encyclopedia (2012).