Notes on contributors

Amanda Bailey is Associate Professor of English at the University of Maryland. She is the author of Flaunting: Style and the Subversive Male Body in Renaissance England (University of Toronto Press, 2007), Of Bondage: Debt, Property, and Personhood in Early Modern England (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2013) and co-editor of Masculinity and the Metropolis of Vice, 1550–1650 (Palgrave, 2010). Her essays have appeared in journals such as Criticism, Renaissance Drama, English Literary Renaissance, and Shakespeare Quarterly, and several edited volumes.

Allison K. Deutermann is Assistant Professor of English at Baruch College, City University of New York. Her essays on sixteenth- and seventeenth-century theatre and culture have appeared in edited collections and journals, including Shakespeare Quarterly. She is currently writing a book on hearing, taste, and theatrical form in early modern England.

Heather James is Associate Professor of English and Comparative Literature at the University of Southern California. She is the author of Shakespeare's Troy: Drama, Politics, and the Translation of Empire (Cambridge University Press, 1997) and has written widely on Shakespeare, Ovid, and classical transmission in early modern poetry, prose, and drama. She is also co-editor of the Norton Anthology of World Literature.

David Scott Kastan is the George M. Bodman Professor of English at Yale University. A general editor of the Arden Shakespeare, he has published widely on Shakespeare and early modern English literature, and also edited Marlowe's Dr. Faustus, Milton's Paradise Lost, and Shakespeare's 1 Henry IV. His books include Shakespeare after Theory (Routledge, 1999) and Shakespeare and the Book (Cambridge University Press, 2001), and he was the editor of the five-volume Oxford Encyclopedia of British Literature (2006). His Will to Believe: Shakespeare and Religion is forthcoming from Oxford University Press, and he is completing, with the painter Stephen Farthing, a book entitled Living Color.

András Kiséry is Assistant Professor of English at The City College of New York, City University of New York. His work on early modern drama and political culture and on the study of the material text have appeared or are forthcoming in, among others, the European Journal of English Studies and ELH. He is now writing a book called Hamlet's Moment: Early Jacobean Drama and the Socialization of Political Competence.

Jeffrey Todd Knight is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Washington and author of the forthcoming Bound to Read: Compilations, Collections, and the Production of Renaissance Literature (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2013). His articles on textual studies, literary interpretation, and the history of the book have appeared in Shakespeare Quarterly, Huntington Library Quarterly, Textual Cultures, Criticism, and Book History.

Peter Lake is Professor of History and of the History of Christianity at Vanderbilt University. He has published on a wide variety of subjects in the history and culture of early modern England, including most recently The Trials of Margaret Clitherow: Persecution, Martyrdom and the Politics of Sanctity in Elizabethan England (Continuum, 2011), co-authored with Michael Questier. He co-edited, with Steven Pincus, The Politics of the Public Sphere in Early Modern England (Manchester, 2007), and is currently completing a book on Shakespeare's drama and the politics of the 1590s, as well as preparing for publication his 2010–2011 Ford's Lectures in British History at Oxford, called Bad Queen Bess? Libelous Politics and Secret Histories in an Age of Confessional Conflict.

Tanya Pollard is Professor of English at Brooklyn College and the Graduate Center, City University of New York. Her publications include Shakespeare's Theater: A Sourcebook (Blackwell, 2004) and Drugs and Theater in Early Modern England (Oxford, 2005), as well as essays on early modern plays, medicine, and classical reception in journals including Shakespeare Studies and Renaissance Drama, and edited volumes. Her co-edited volume Shakespearean Sensations: Experiencing Literature in Early Modern England is forthcoming with Cambridge (2013), and she is currently writing a book about the influence of Greek plays and genre theory on the development of popular stage genres in early modern England.

Shankar Raman is a professor in the Literature Faculty at MIT. He is the author of Framing 'India': The Colonial Imaginary in Early Modern Culture (Stanford University Press, 2002) and Renaissance Literature and Postcolonial Studies (Edinburgh University Press, 2011). He is also co-editor, with Lowell Gallagher, of Knowing Shakespeare: Senses, Embodiment, Cognition (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010). His current project is a monograph on the relationship between literature and mathematics in early modern Europe, tentatively entitled Before the Two Cultures.

Adam Smyth is Senior Lecturer in Early Modern Literature at Birkbeck College, University of London. He is the author of Autobiography in Early Modern England (Cambridge University Press, 2010) and Profit and Delight: Printed Miscellanies in England, 1640–82 (Wayne State University Press, 2004), and the editor of A Pleasing Sinne: Drink and Conviviality in Seventeenth-century England (Boydell and Brewer, 2004). He is currently working on early modern book destruction, and the religious community of Little Gidding.

Alan Stewart is Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University, and International Director of the Centre for Editing Lives and Letters in London. His most recent publications include Shakespeare's Letters (Oxford University Press, 2008); Bacon's Early Writings, 1584–1586, volume 1 of the Oxford Francis Bacon (Oxford University Press, 2012); and, co-edited with Garrett Sullivan, the three-volume Encyclopedia of English Renaissance Literature (Wiley-Blackwell, 2012).

Henry S. Turner is Associate Professor in the Department of English at Rutgers University. He is the author of The English Renaissance Stage: Geometry, Poetics, and the Practical Spatial Arts, 1580–1630 (Oxford University Press, 2006) and of Shakespeare's Double Helix (Continuum, 2008). He has edited The Culture of Capital: Property, Cities, and Knowledge in Early Modern England (Routledge, 2002) and he co-edits the book series 'Literary and scientific cultures of early modernity' for Ashgate Press. His essays have appeared in ELH, Renaissance Drama, differences, postmedieval, Configurations, and Shakespeare Quarterly. He is currently writing a book about the history of the corporation as an idea and institution.

Matthew Zarnowiecki is Chair of the Department of Languages and Literature at Touro College's Lander College for Men and Lander College for Women, New York. He received his PhD from Columbia University, and has published articles on lyric poetry, early modern book history and manuscript culture, and textual reproduction in EMLS, The Sidney Journal, and English Manuscript Studies 1100–1700. His book, forthcoming from University of Toronto Press, is titled Fair Copies: Reproducing the English Lyric from Tottel to Shakespeare.