Notes on contributors

Philip Bull is an Honorary Associate in History at La Trobe University in Melbourne, where he has taught since 1975. He is the author of Land, Politics and Nationalism: A Study of the Irish Land Question (Dublin, 1996) and of articles on late nineteenth and early twentieth century Irish history.

Fergus Campbell is Reader in Social and Cultural History at Newcastle University and author of Land and Revolution: Nationalist Politics in the West of Ireland, 1891–1921 (Oxford, 2005) and The Irish Establishment, 1879–1914 (Oxford, 2009).

Samuel Clark is Professor of Sociology at the University of Western Ontario. His publications include Social Origins of the Irish Land War (Princeton, 1979) and Irish Peasants: Violence and Political Unrest, 1780–1914, co-edited with James S. Donnelly, Jr. (Madison and Manchester, 1983). He is now completing a monograph on the making of modern state honours in Western Europe.

David Jones is currently a member of staff of the Public Policy Program, Faculty of Business, Economics and Policy Studies, University of Brunei. His research covers land policy and land reform, governance reform and public finance and government procurement, in which areas he has published widely.

Anne Kane is Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Houston-Downtown. She has published numerous articles and chapters analysing the Irish Land War from a cultural theoretical perspective and her book, Constructing Irish National Identity: Ritual and Discourse during the Land War, 1879–1882, was published by Palgrave Macmillan in 2011.

Heather Laird is a Lecturer in the School of English, University College Cork. She is the author of Subversive Law in Ireland, 1879–1920 (Dublin, 2005) and editor of Daniel Corkery's Cultural Criticism: Selected Writings (Cork, 2012).

Gerard Moran lectures in the Department of History at NUI Maynooth. He has published extensively on nineteenth-century Ireland and is the author of Sending Out Ireland's Poor: Assisted Emigration from Ireland in the Nineteenth Century (Dublin, 2004) and Sir Robert Gore Booth and His Landed Estates in Co. Sligo: Land, Famine, Emigration and Politics, 1825–1876 (Dublin, 2006).

Gearóid Ó Tuathaigh, F.R.Hist.S., is Professor Emeritus in Modern History at NUI, Galway. Educated at NUI, Galway, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, he has held visiting appointments at universities on both sides of the Atlantic. His numerous historical publications relate mainly to nineteenth- and twentieth-century Irish and British history. He was the Academic Director of the Irish Landed Estates database project (www.landedestates.ie).

Barbara Lewis Solow is a graduate of Radcliffe College and received her MA and PhD from Harvard University. She is a retired Associate Professor of Economics at Boston University and retired Research Associate at the W.E.B. DuBois Institute for African and African-American Research at Harvard University. Among her publications are The Land Question and the Irish Economy, 1870–1903 (Cambridge, Mass., 1971) and 'A New Look at the Irish Land Question,' Economic and Social Review (Ireland) (1981). She also has many publications on the history of plantation slavery in the Caribbean.

Tony Varley lectures in Political Science and Sociology at the National University of Ireland, Galway. He has recently co-edited A Living Countryside? The Politics of Sustainable Development in Rural Ireland (Farnham, 2009) and Integration through Subordination: The Politics of Agricultural Modernisation in Industrial Europe (Turnhout, 2013).