Delphine Ancien is a Lecturer and Researcher at the School of Geography, Planning and Environmental Policy at University College Dublin and a Research Administrator for the Research Evaluation Policy and Practice (REPP) project at the Childhood Development Initiative in Tallaght West, Dublin, Ireland. She completed a PhD in Geography at the Ohio State University in 2008. She has recently completed a collaborative project investigating state–diaspora relations in various national contexts and the development of diaspora strategies.

Mark Boyle is Professor of Geography at the National University of Ireland Maynooth. His research interests include the development of diaspora strategy and, relatedly, the experience of Irish in the west of Scotland and Scots in Ireland. His book, Metropolitan Anxieties, was published by Ashgate in 2011.

Fina Carpena-Méndez is an Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Oregon State University. She completed a PhD in Anthropology (2006) at the University of California Berkeley. Her research examines the effects of neoliberal globalization on the condition of children’s lives in the contemporary world, with particular reference to Latin America (Mexico and Brazil), the USA and Europe (Ireland and Spain).

Liam Coakley is ‘Head of Interdisciplinary Programme – MA in Contemporary Migration and Diaspora Studies’ at University College Cork. His research interests include migration policy, transnationalism and the politics of ‘integration’ in Ireland. He has published in Irish Geography, Geography and International Migration and has produced research reports for a range of statutory and non-statutory organizations, for example the Immigrant Council of Ireland, Integrating Ireland, the International Organization for Migration and the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

Deirdre Conlon is Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology and Urban Studies, Saint Peter’s College in Jersey City, New Jersey. Among her current projects is an Economic and Social Research Council-funded comparative study of asylum advocacy and activism sectors in the USA and UK; in this work Deirdre’s focus is the emotional spaces, politics and effects of migrant advocacy work. She has published articles in Irish Geography (2009), Environment and Planning D: Society and Space (2010) and Gender, Place and Culture (2011) and has contributed book chapters to three edited volumes. Deirdre has co-edited a volume with Dominique Moran and Nick Gill titled Carceral Spaces: Mobility and Agency in Imprisonment and Migrant Detention (Ashgate, 2013).

Mary Gilmartin is Lecturer in the Department of Geography at the National University of Ireland Maynooth. Her recent research focuses explicitly on the geographies of contemporary migration to and from Ireland, and on theorizations of migration.

Jamie Goodwin-White is Assistant Professor in the Department of Geography at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her research interests include immigration, migration, inequality, labour markets and social mobility. Recent publications include journal articles in Social Science Quarterly, Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, Economic Geography and Population, Space and Place.

Breda Gray is Senior Lecturer and Director of postgraduate programmes in Gender, Culture and Society in the Department of Sociology at the University of Limerick, Ireland. She is author of Women and the Irish Diaspora (Routledge, 2004) and has published widely on diaspora, transnationalism, mobilities, feminism and the politics of emotion. She is joint Principal Investigator on the Government of Ireland, Irish Social Science Platform Project: ‘Nomadic Work/Life in the Knowledge Economy’ (http://nwl.ul.ie/) and was PI on the recent Irish Research Council for Humanities and Social Sciences (IRCHSS) project: ‘The Irish Catholic Church and the Politics of Migration’ (www.ul.ie/icctmp).

William Jenkins is Associate Professor of History and Geography at York University, Toronto. His published work has focused on agrarian change in nineteenth- and twentieth-century Ireland and Irish immigrants in nineteenth-century urban North America and has appeared in the Journal of Contributors

Aphra Kerr is Lecturer in Sociology at the National University of Ireland Maynooth. Aphra’s current research focuses on social aspects of the production and consumption of media in a global context with a particular focus on new media. Her book, The Business and Culture of Digital Games, was published by Sage in 2006.

Rebecca King-O’Riain is Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the National University of Ireland Maynooth. Her research focuses on globalization, transnationalism, race and mixed race. Her academic publications include Pure Beauty: Judging Race in Japanese American Beauty Pageants, and a range of journal articles, book chapters and reports.

Rob Kitchin is Director of the National Institute for Regional and Spatial Analysis and Chairperson of the Irish Social Sciences Platform. His principal research interests are cartography, software and social geography. He has published widely across the social sciences, including 20 books and over 100 articles and book chapters. He is editor of the international journals, Progress in Human Geography and Dialogues in Human Geography and he was the editor-in-chief of the twelve-volume, International Encyclopedia of Human Geography.

Bettina Migge is Senior Lecturer in Linguistics at University College Dublin. Her research interests include sociolinguistics, language contact, and language and migration, and she has published widely on questions of language contact and language use among migrant populations.

Caitríona Ní Laoire is Lecturer in Applied Social Studies at University College Cork. Her background is in migration studies and human geography. Her research interests lie in the areas of Irish migration and diaspora, child and youth migration, return migration, migrant life narratives, rurality and gendered identities. She has published in Social and Cultural Geography, Irish Geography, Journal of Rural Studies and Translocations.

Patricia O’Connor graduated with a PhD from the University of New South Wales in 2006. Her PhD focuses on the experiences of recent Irish migrants to Australia. She currently works in Melbourne as a Senior Evaluation
Consultant at Australian Healthcare Associates and holds an honorary academic appointment with the School of Social Sciences, College of Arts at the University of Western Sydney.

Angèle Smith is Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Northern British Columbia. Her research focuses on the intersection of transnational migration and identity with space, place and landscape, with a geographical focus on Ireland, and she has published widely in this area.

Gavan Titley is Lecturer in Media Studies at the National University of Ireland Maynooth. He is the author, with Alana Lentin, of The Crises of Multiculturalism: Racism in a Neoliberal Age (Zed Books, 2011) and his work has appeared in Ethnic & Racial Studies, the European Journal of Cultural Studies, Journalism: Theory, Practice, Criticism and The Irish Review.

Naomi Tyrrell (née Bushin) is Lecturer in Human Geography at Plymouth University, England. She graduated from Swansea University, Wales, with a PhD in Geography (2006). Her research interests include children’s experiences of family migration, children’s participation in migration decision-making, and migrant children’s social networks and experiences of schooling. She has published in Area, Population Space and Place and Children’s Geographies, and is joint editor (with Allen White, Caitríona Ní Laoire and Fina Carpena-Méndez) of Transnational Migration and Childhood, published by Routledge in 2012.

Bronwen Walter is Professor of Irish Diaspora Studies at Anglia Ruskin University, England. Her research focuses on Irish migration to Britain and the wider experiences of the Irish diaspora. Her academic publications include a monograph Outsiders Inside: Whiteness, Place and Irish Women (Routledge, 2001) and articles and chapters on a wide range of aspects of Irish emigration and settlement abroad.

Allen White is a Research Associate with the Institute for Social Sciences in the 21st Century, University College Cork. His recent research focuses on the experiences of migrant children in Ireland, and he is joint author (with Caitríona Ní Laoire, Naomi Tyrrell and Fina Carpena-Méndez) of Childhood and Migration in Europe, published by Ashgate in 2011. He is Research Officer in the College of Arts, Celtic Studies and Social Sciences, University College Cork.