ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has accumulated many gratitudes along the way. My first, and most fundamental, acknowledgement is to the Arts and Humanities Research Council without whose funding this project may never have happened. The overseas portion of the research has been generously supported by the University of London Central Research Fund, the Royal Historical Society, and the David M. Stowe Fellowship (Yale Divinity School). The archivists at the School of Oriental and African Studies have been a constant and unstinting source of knowledge and assistance and I must thank Jo Ichimura, Gillian Butler and Lance Martin in particular, for their help and friendship. Many a happy day has been spent in their company. While overseas I benefited from the expertise of archivists at the National Library of South Africa, the Cory Library at Rhodes University, the National Library of New Zealand and the Library of Yale Divinity School. My thanks also to the Council of World Mission for permission to use numerous images from their archive, and to the Basel Mission archive and the University of Cambridge Library in the same vein.

Sources of inspiration there have been many (including the works of Rhonda Semple, Liz Buettner, Clare Midgley and Catherine Hall, all of whom I have been fortunate enough to meet and converse with about my research at various stages), but I can only thank one person for always keeping me grounded. Professor Andrew Porter has guided my work for many years, and can always be relied upon for sound commentary, constructive criticism and unstinting wit and wisdom, for which I remain ever grateful. I have also received a great deal of support from the staff at King’s College London; special thanks to John Stuart and Ludmilla Jordanova, as well as many others in the department for their kindness and confidence. Thanks also to Clare Midgley and Deborah Gaitskell for their constructive criticisms and continued support. And what would we do without good and generous proofreaders? Dave Monger, Bronwen Everill, Liz Harvey, Annie Selway, Rachel Johnson, Claire McCallum and various members of my family have all read parts of the book. Thanks also to the staff and reviewers at Manchester University Press, and the blind reviewers at the Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History and the Journal of Women’s History for their helpful comments and guidance. Parts of this work have also benefited from the comments and questions of various conference and seminar participants over the years. The regulars of the Imperial History seminar and the Christian Missions in Global History seminar at the Institute of Historical Research have been particularly helpful, and I must especially thank my fellow conveners of the latter for their enthusiastic encouragement.

Contrary to expectation, I did not find this process an isolating one, and have been lucky enough to make many good and lifelong friends along the way. My special thanks must go to Ben Bankhurst, Rachel Bright, Esme Cleall, Bronwen Everill, Laura Ishiguro and Annie Selway in particular. In the last two years I have found much joy and friendship at the University of Exeter, and while I cannot thank everyone by name, special thanks to Antonella Liuzzo Scorpo, Laura Sangha, Sara Barker, Claire McCallum and Jenny Lea for making me feel so at home there. My family have always been, and remain, the ultimate inspiration for my work, and my parents and siblings have certainly earned recognition here for their generosity, encouragement and support. In the next generation too, my nieces Grace and Robyn have kept me in touch with reality, and have always been wonderful and entertaining distractions from my work! During the original research my baby nephew Joseph cuddled me back into good spirits on more than one occasion; and since then his younger siblings Megan and Sam have done sterling work in the same direction. Nothing I have ever done or will ever do could be achieved without the love and encouragement of my family, whose actions remind me every day that mere words will never be enough. Thank you.
