Acknowledgements

As the Principal Investigator and the Co-Investigator for the Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC) project that formed the groundwork of this collection, the editors would like to acknowledge their gratitude to a number of persons and institutions.

We would like to thank, at the University of Westminster, the members of the Department of English, Linguistics and Cultural Studies who were involved in the early stages of the project’s application and development; those involved in research support in the Faculty of Social Sciences and Humanities; and the Regent Street campus estates staff who facilitated the setting up and running of the project’s events.

In this context of research support, we must thank the AHRC Beyond Text team, particularly Prof. Evelyn Welch and Ruth Hogarth, for their inclusion of the project within the Networks and Workshops awards, and for their help and guidance with the project. Their development and management of the Beyond Text scheme, and the way in which this scheme brought together all the award holders for discussion and networking, was instrumental not only in understanding the scope and remits of other projects, but also in understanding those of our own. Thanks should also be given here for the initial support for the project, because it has seed-funded the development of an ongoing online and offline research events and publications project run by the Principal Investigator, entitled ‘Archiving Cultures’.

Tom Ruffles and Melvyn Willin, participants from the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), which was the project’s Partner Organisation, must be given special thanks here. The long, rich, and complex history of the SPR, and its consistent analysis and archiving of matters of the paranormal, makes it the key historical institution in this field.
of research, and its centrality is marked by attention to its role in a significant number of contributions to this collection. We were thus privileged to involve members of the SPR in our discussions, a participation that gave the project’s seminars a character, breadth, and particularity that they would otherwise have found lacking.

Consequently, we would also like to thank the invited speakers at the project’s seminars and the final conference: Carolyn Burdett, Roger Cardinal, Robert Eaglestone, Amy Evans, Charlie Gere, Monica Germanà, John Harvey, Susan Hiller, Martyn Jolly, Tatiana Kontou, Peter Lamont, Roger Luckhurst, Susan MacWilliam, Olivia Plender, Aura Satz, Suzanne Treister, Marina Warner, and Leigh Wilson. All of these speakers’ presentations brought to the project a productive diversity of methodological, historical, and critical perspectives through which to develop understanding of the issues at hand.

Not least, we would also like to thank all those who attended the seminars and the conference for their participation and contribution. The conversations, conflicts, and negotiations of such interaction were instrumental to the project’s progress, and its intellectual outcomes.

Lastly, then, we should express our gratitude more generally to all those involved, including the contributors to this collection, for giving us the opportunity to engage in a process of intellectual endeavour that has positively developed our critical and cultural understanding of the field of study under consideration here, as well as our understanding of the politics of cultural and technological forms more generally. We hope that our contribution to this field, as represented by this book, is as generative and thought provoking for its readers.
