List of contributors

Jacquelyn Arnold completed her doctoral research at London Metropolitan University in 2014. Her PhD, 'British Civil Defence Policy in Response to the Threat of Nuclear Attack 1972–1986', analysed the genesis and development of civil defence during the last two decades of the Cold War by examining the ways in which policies were shaped by economic, ideological and political factors. Current research examines the social and cultural aspects of civil defence and nuclear war, British atomic culture, post-war public information film-making, and the historiography and hauntology of 1970s Britain.

Gavin Brown is an associate professor in human geography at the University of Leicester. He is a cultural, historical and political geographer with wide-ranging research interests. His recent research has recorded the history of the anti-apartheid Non-Stop Picket of the South African Embassy in London in the 1980s. He has a book (co-authored with Helen Yaffe) about Youth Activism and Solidarity: The Non-Stop Picket Against Apartheid forthcoming in 2018 with Routledge. He is a co-editor (with Kath Browne) of The Ashgate Research Companion to Geographies of Sex and Sexualities and is currently developing a new research project about the geopolitics of sexuality.

Sheryl Bernadette Buckley has recently completed a PhD exploring and evaluating the industrial strategy of the Communist Party of Great Britain within the National Union of Mineworkers between 1945 and 1985. Alongside this, Sheryl Bernadette's work has also appeared in Capital and Class and British Politics.

Jodi Burkett is principal lecturer in history at the University of Portsmouth. She is the author of Constructing Post-Imperial Britain: Britishness, 'Race' and the Radical Left in the 1960s (Palgrave, 2013).

Daniel Finn is from Dublin. He received his doctorate in history from University College Cork for research on republicanism and left-wing politics in modern Ireland, and is currently working on a book exploring the same topic. He is deputy editor of the New Left Review.

Michael Fitzpatrick joined the International Socialists as a medical student in 1971. He subsequently joined the Revolutionary Communist Tendency and was a leading member of the Revolutionary Communist Party throughout its life. He was, at different times, editor of the next step and Confrontation, often writing under the pen-name of Mike Freeman. He subsequently worked as a general practitioner in Hackney and, together with several veterans of the RCP and others, continues to write for the on-line magazine Spiked as well as for a range of other publications, on matters medical and political.

Ewan Gibbs is an early career lecturer in sociology and social policy at the University of the West of Scotland. He completed a PhD thesis at the University of Glasgow in 2016 which studied deindustrialisation in Scottish coalfield areas, considering its long-term impact in reshaping of class and national consciousness. Ewan has published research on the poll tax non-payment campaign and the conceptualisation of a Scottish 'industrial nation' over the mid-twentieth century.

Diarmaid Kelliher is a research associate in human geography at the University of Glasgow where he has recently completed a PhD on solidarity, London and the 1984–85 miners' strike. He has previously published articles in Antipode, Soundings and History Workshop Journal.

Daryl Leeworthy is an associate tutor at the Department for Adult and Continuing Education, Swansea University, where he teaches modern American, British and European history. He was previously lecturer in community history at the University of Huddersfield and has taught in Britain and Canada. His research focuses on the labour movement and the left in Britain, liberation movements in Britain, Canada and the United States, social democracy in Europe, and the history of sport. His next book, Labour Country: Radicalism and Democracy in South Wales is published by Parthian in 2018.

Christopher Massey is a post-doctoral researcher at Teesside University currently working on the life of Lord Tom Sawyer, the former Labour Party General Secretary. His doctoral thesis focused on steel nationalisation in the Attlee governments. Outside of academia he is a Labour Party councillor and Deputy Leader of Redcar and Cleveland Borough Council.

Lawrence Parker lives and works in London. His book, The Kick Inside: Revolutionary Opposition in the CPGB, 1945–91, was published by November Publications in 2012. Recent published articles include a study of the Communist Party of Great Britain's anti-revisionist opposition in the first volume of Against the Grain (Manchester University Press, 2014); and an exploration of the political ramifications of the 'Caudwell Controversy' (2015) in Socialist History. He is currently researching the CPGB and the National Left Wing Movement of the 1920s and is an erratic contributor to the Weekly Worker, a British Marxist newspaper.

Daisy Payling completed her PhD research on activism and local government in Sheffield in the 1970s and 1980s at the University of Birmingham. She is currently a research fellow in the Centre for History in Public Health at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine where she works on the history of public health surveys.

Jack Saunders is a historian and research fellow at the University of Warwick. His research looks at work and workplace culture in post-war Britain. He has previously written on labour militancy in the British motor industry and is now studying attitudes towards work in the British National Health Service from 1948 onwards.

Rory Scothorne is a PhD candidate in Scottish history at the University of Edinburgh, studying the relationship between the radical left and the home rule movement in Scotland from the 1970s to the 1990s. He was a co-founder of National Collective, the cultural campaign for Scottish independence, and now writes and agitates as part of the Roch Winds Collective. He is a co-author of Roch Winds: A Treacherous Guide to the State of Scotland (Luath, 2016).

Evan Smith is a visiting adjunct fellow in the School of History and International Relations at Flinders University, South Australia. He has written widely on the left, anti-racism and anti-colonialism in the British Commonwealth. He is the co-author of Race, Gender and the Body in British Immigration Control (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014) and the co-editor of Against the Grain: The British Far Left from 1956 (Manchester, 2014).

J. D. Taylor is a researcher in political philosophy, undertaking a PhD on the politics of desire in Spinoza, at the University of Roehampton. He is the author of Island Story: Journeying through Unfamiliar Britain (Repeater Books, 2016) and Negative Capitalism: Cynicism in the Neoliberal Era (Zero Books, 2013).

Matthew Worley is professor of modern history at the University of Reading. He has written widely on twentieth-century British politics and is currently researching a project on the link between youth culture and politics in Britain during the late 1970s and early 1980s. He is a co-editor of Twentieth Century Communism and member of the Subcultures Network steering committee.