Contributors

Matthew C. Augustine is Lecturer in Seventeenth-Century English Literature at the University of St Andrews. With Steven N. Zwicker he is editor of Lord Rochester in the Restoration World (Cambridge, 2015); a monograph, Aesthetics of Contingency: Writing, Politics, and Culture in England, 1639–89, is forthcoming from Manchester University Press.

Anne Cotterill is Associate Professor of English at Missouri University of Science and Technology. She is the author of Digressive Voices in Early Modern English Literature (Oxford, 2004) and of a number of distinguished articles on Marvell, Dryden, and on early modern English women's writing.

Christopher D'Addario is Associate Professor of English at Gettysburg College. His first book, Exile and Journey in Seventeenth-Century Literature, was published by Cambridge University Press in 2007, and he is currently working on a study of the everyday in early modern literature.

Alex Garganigo is Associate Professor of English at Austin College. His work on Shakespeare, Milton, and Marvell has appeared in journals such as SEL, Milton Studies, and Criticism. A book on oaths and swearing in Restoration literature – Samson's Cords: Imposing Oaths in Milton, Marvell, and Butler – will be published by University of Toronto Press in 2018.

Derek Hirst is William Eliot Smith Emeritus Professor of History at Washington University in St Louis. A leading historian of seventeenth-century England, his most recent works include Andrew Marvell, Orphan of the Hurricane (with Steven N. Zwicker, Oxford, 2012) and Dominion: England and its Island Neighbours, 1500–1707 (Oxford, 2012).

Kathleen Lynch is Executive Director of the Folger Institute in Washington DC. Her book, Protestant Autobiography in the Seventeenth-Century Anglophone World (Oxford, 2012), was awarded the Richard L. Greaves Prize by the International John Bunyan Society, and she has written widely on early modern literature, religion, and book history.

Michael McKeon is Board of Governors Distinguished Professor of English at Rutgers University. Among his many outstanding interdisciplinary publications are The Origins of the English Novel, 1600–1740 (Hopkins, 1987), winner of the MLA James Russell Lowell Prize for best book of the year, and The Secret History of Domesticity: Public, Private, and the Division of Knowledge (Hopkins, 2005).

Timothy Raylor is Professor of English at Carleton College. A past president of the Andrew Marvell Society, his publications include Cavaliers, Clubs, and Literary Culture: Sir John Mennes, James Smith, and the Order of the Fancy (Delaware, 1994) and The Essex House Masque of 1621: Viscount Doncaster and the Jacobean Masque (Duchesne, 2000).

Joad Raymond is Professor of Renaissance Studies in the School of English and Drama at Queen Mary University of London. He is the author or editor of more than half a dozen books, including Pamphlets and Pamphleteering in Early Modern Britain (Cambridge, 2003), Milton's Angels: The Early-Modern Imagination (Oxford, 2010), and, most recently, News Networks in Early Modern Europe (Brill, 2016).

Randy Robertson is Associate Professor of English & Creative Writing at Susquehanna University. His first book, Censorship and Conflict in Seventeenth-Century England: The Subtle Art of Division, was published by Penn State University Press in 2009, and he is now working on the relation between wit and scepticism from the Renaissance to the present.

Michael Schoenfeldt is John R. Knott, Jr Collegiate Professor of English at the University of Michigan. His wide-ranging publications include The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare's Poetry (Cambridge, 2010), A Companion to Shakespeare's Sonnets (Blackwell, 2006), and Bodies and Selves in Early Modern England: Physiology and Inwardness in Spenser, Shakespeare, Herbert, and Milton (Cambridge, 1999).

Nigel Smith is William and Annie S. Paton Foundation Professor of Ancient and Modern Literature at Princeton University, where he also co-directs the Center for the Study of Books and Media. He is the author of Andrew Marvell: The Chameleon (Yale, 2010), editor of the Longman Annotated English Poets edition of Marvell's poetry (2003), and has long been a leading scholar of radical religion in revolutionary England.

CONTRIBUTORS

Steven N. Zwicker is Stanley Elkin Professor in the Humanities at Washington University in St Louis. The author or editor of numerous works on early modern politics, literature, and culture, his recent books include the twenty-first-century Oxford Authors edition of John Dryden, Andrew Marvell, Orphan of the Hurricane (with Derek Hirst, Oxford, 2012), and Writing Lives: Biography and Textuality, Identity and Representation in Early Modern England (ed. with Kevin Sharpe, Oxford, 2008).