Acknowledgements

ANY PROJECT OF THIS kind is long in the making and the debts accumulated in the process are many, varied and inevitably too complex to be acknowledged in the detail they deserve. Conversations and discussions, comments and ideas have been contributed along the way by many friends and colleagues, among whom it is important, given the subject matter, to single out Chris Haigh, the late Gordon Forster and Martin Ingram. We are both fortunate to have the University of Huddersfield as a context in which to work: over the years, the warm collegiality and generous support, and the clear direction and leadership, offered by fellow historians and senior colleagues alike has been vital to the stimulation of this work. Especial mention must go to Professors David Taylor, Mike Russ, Keith Laybourn, and Vice-Chancellor Professor Bob Cryan. The book was completed in the week immediately after the University of Huddersfield won the Times Higher Education Leadership and Management Award for Outstanding Leadership and Management Team 2018, and it is one sign of the strength of the team that it could support the completion of this work in the midst of so many other exciting agendas. Many dozens of students who have been involved in modules on late medieval and early modern English social and political history also, probably unwittingly, have played a major role, and deserve their share of the credit. None, of course, share the responsibility for any misjudgements and errors which remain.

Anyone working on a project of this kind is fortunate to have the opportunity of reading in some outstanding archives and libraries, and the staff of those particularly important to the evidence used here deserve mention: Carlisle Archive Centre (Cumbria Archive Service), Cheshire Archives; Durham University Library; West Yorkshire Archive Service in Leeds; Leeds University Library Archives and Special Collections; Leicester and Rutland Record Office; Lancashire Record Office; and Borthwick Institute for Archives at the University of York. Special thanks are also due to colleagues in Computing and Library Services at the University of Huddersfield, especially document delivery, for their unfailing patience and excellent service over the years. Much logistical and administrative support has come from Sam Arrowsmith, Claire White and Katie Baron.

Manchester University Press have provided an unusually positive and supportive environment for the completion of the work: particular thanks are due to Emma Brennan and her editorial and production team, and to anonymous reviewers for their helpful comments.

We are grateful for permission to refer to the unpublished theses of Helen Matthews, the late Jack Brierley Watson and the late Philip Tyler.

Woven through this book is the support we have received from our respective families, in their different ways: Tim Thornton is always aware how much this reflects the love, stimulation and inspiration provided by Sue Johns, Carys and Gwyn; Katharine Carlton would like to acknowledge debts to the late Edna Ayngé, loving support from Jason Carlton, Alice Carlton, Robert and Vivienne Walker.
