ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Research for this book began while completing other projects during my tenure as the 2005 J. D. Stout Research Fellow in New Zealand Studies at the Stout Research Centre, Victoria University of Wellington, and as Visiting Scholar at the School of Social and Cultural Studies, which I am grateful to Brigitte Bönisch-Brednich for organising. Further progress was made after I moved to the University of Hull where the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences provided essential ongoing travel funding. The book was finally completed at the University of Otago. I am much obliged to the British Academy for awarding the project a Small Research Grant (SG-40172) and am grateful to John M. MacKenzie for incorporating this book into his enviable Studies in Imperialism series at Manchester University Press.

Various individuals have responded to my past and present appeals for personal testimonies from Irish and Scottish migrants and I would like to thank the following for generously sharing their private archives: Reg Brown, Professor Michael J. Crozier, Douglas Duncan, Alice Gemming, Sandra Gilpin, Barbara Holt, Moore Fisher Johnston, Jenny Langford, Joan Leonard, Lorna Ross, Leone Shaw, May Tapp, and numerous others who submitted material not eventually used in this study. I am also deeply grateful to Malcolm Evans, Tom Scott, and Ashley Smith, who all kindly provided permission for their cartoons to appear in this book. Acquisition of the images appeared courtesy of funding from the Department of History's Research Committee and I am also grateful to specialists in New Zealand history at Otago – Tony Ballantyne, John Stenhouse, and Angela Wanhalla – who discussed aspects of this book with me or pointed me in the direction of relevant sources.

Numerous archives were consulted throughout New Zealand and several individuals were especially helpful. Both Seán Brosnahan and Jill Haley at the Otago Settlers Museum provided good leads to little-used sources. At the Hocken Collections Anna Blackman, Ali Clarke, and other staff were extremely helpful and speedily delivered documents. The New Zealand Film Archive in Wellington was a particularly relaxing place in which to work and I am especially thankful to Kristen Wineera for her assistance there. Permission to consult and reproduce material from lunatic asylum records held at Auckland and Dunedin was kindly provided by Maggie Mackenzie of the Auckland District Health Board and Sonia Hand and her predecessor Morva Wood of the Otago District Health Board. Again, provision of these records was speedily delivered and my thanks in particular to staff at the Dunedin Regional Office of Archives New Zealand (Andrew, Lois, Peter, Sharon, and Vivienne). I am also obliged to staff at Archives New Zealand regional offices at Auckland, Wellington, and Christchurch. My thanks also to staff at the Beaglehole Room at Victoria University of Wellington who made available rare items of Scottish poetry. Swift and knowledgeable assistance was also given by staff at the Auckland Museum Library, Alexander Turnbull Library, Canterbury Library, and Canterbury Museum.

Throughout my period of research and writing this book I have benefited from the friendship and support of numerous individuals. In Wellington, colleagues and visiting fellows at the Stout Research Centre assisted in numerous ways while the Bod's (now Murphy's) Friday night regulars provided relentless and riotous entertainment. In particular, Richard Hill and Art Pomeroy kindly provided me with lodging and transportation during subsequent visits. Thanks guys. In Hull on return visits, Nick Evans was similarly generous with offers of accommodation and transport, as was Philip Stenning, who also suggested me as a speaker for Keele's Forum for Ethnicity, Migration, and Marginalisation (though he has perhaps not forgiven me for influencing his acquisition of two kittens instead of one!). I am also enormously grateful for the vigorous and relentless support provided to me over the years by the most influential scholars in the field of Scottish and Irish migration: Tom Devine, David Fitzpatrick, John MacKenzie, Don MacRaild, and Eric Richards.

As always, my mother and grandmother have been steadfast in their love and support during exceptionally difficult times. This time the book is dedicated to Murphy Smurfy, the most wonderful of munchkins, who sadly and suddenly relocated to Rainbow Bridge in early 2009. Her ducks and dives around the pylons and trees, communicative barks while training and playing, snoring and twitching while sleeping, nudges for food and attention, and sloppy licks and deep sighs, among numerous other quirky characteristics, are heartbreakingly missed. Thank you for the days my little munchkins punchkins.
