NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Constance Backhouse is Professor of Law at the University of Ottawa, Canada. Her Book Petticoats and Prejudice: Women and Law in Nineteenth Century Canada won the 1992 Willard Hurst Prize in American Legal History awarded by the Law & Society Association.

John Borrows B.A., M.A., LL.B., LL.M. (Toronto), D.Jur. (Osgoode Hall) is Associate Professor in the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. He formerly worked as an Associate Professor and Director of First Nations Legal Studies in the Faculty of Law at the University of British Columbia, and as an Associate Professor and Director of the Intensive Programme in Lands, Resources and First Nations Governments at Osgoode Hall Law School. Professor Borrows is a visiting professor and Executive Director of the Indian Legal Program at Arizona State University's College of Law in Phoenix, in 2000–2001. He teaches in the broad area that encompasses constitutional law, Aboriginal law, natural resources, law and the environment, and land-use planning. He is Anishinabe/Ojibway and a member of the Chippewa of the Nawash First Nation in Ontario.

Christine Choo M.Soc.Wk., Ph.D. formerly worked for the Western Australian Aboriginal Legal Service in Perth. She is an honorary research fellow at the Department of Social Work and Social Policy at the University of Western Australia and works as a consultant historian on native title cases.

Catharine Coleborne completed her Ph.D. in history at La Trobe University, Melbourne, and is now a lecturer at Waikato University, New Zealand. She teaches world history, Australian history and social histories of sickness and health and has published work on lunacy legislation, patient case-books, official inquiries and psychiatry in the museum.

Ann Curthoys is Professor of History at the Australian National University in Canberra. She has published extensively on race and gender in Australian history and is currently writing a book on the 1960s. She is the author of For and Against Feminism: A Personal Journey into Feminist Theory and History (1988).

Radha D'Souza is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Auckland, New Zealand, working on international environment law. Radha studied arts and law at the University of Bombay and is a Member of the Bar, High Court of Bombay. Radha has published a number of papers and chapters in books and is a human rights and labour rights activist.

Ian Duncanson works in the areas of legal-social theory, law and history and legal education. On the theme of law, imperialism and postcolonialism he has published most recently in the Canadian Journal of Law and Society (2000), Postcolonial Studies (2000), The Inter-national Journal for the Semiotics of Law

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

(2000) and in Gideon Calder, Edward Garret and Jess Shannon (eds), Liberalism and Social Justice: International Perspectives (2000). When Ian is unable to be in Apollo Bay, Victoria, he lives in Melbourne.

Julie Evans is Australian Research Council Postdoctoral Fellow in the Department of History, University of Melbourne. She is particularly interested in nineteenth-century comparative colonial history and law and is co-author of Grounds For Dispute (forthcoming).

Peter Fitzpatrick is Anniversary Professor of Law at Birkbeck College, University of London, and has taught at universities in Europe, North America and Papua New Guinea. He has published numerous works on law and social theory, law and racism, and imperialism, including The Mythology of Modern Law (1992) and Modernism and the Grounds of Law (2001).

Helen Gardner completed her doctoral dissertation in Pacific history at La Trobe University, Melbourne, where she now works as a research associate. She was awarded a scholarship to the Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies at the Australian National University and more recently has published an article in Messy Entanglements, the proceedings of the 10th Pacific History Conference in 1996.

Hilary Golder completed her undergraduate degree at Oxford University and her Ph.D. at the University of New South Wales, Sydney. She has published several books on the history of law in Australia, including Divorce in Nineteenth Century New South Wales (1985) and High and Responsible Office: A History of the Magistracy in New South Wales (1991), and is now a Research Associate at La Trobe University, Melbourne.

Patricia Grimshaw is Max Crawford Professor of History at the University of Melbourne. She has published extensively on women's history of New Zealand, Australia and the Pacific, and is currently working on a collaborative project, which will be published under the title Grounds for Dispute Indigenous Peoples and Citizenship in Nineteenth-Century Settler Societies (forth-coming from Manchester University Press)

Diane Kirkby is Reader in History, La Trobe University, Melbourne, and President of the Australian and New Zealand Law and History Society. Her book Alice Henry: The Power of Pen and Voice (1991) won the W.K. Hancock Prize awarded by the Australian Historical Association. She is the editor of Sex, Power and Justice: Historical Perspectives on Law in Australia (1995) and author of Barmaids: A History of Women's Work in Pubs (1997).

John McLaren is Lansdowne Professor of Law, University of Victoria, British Columbia. He has co-edited books on the legal history of British Columbia and the Yukon and of the North American West, and has several more under way. A co-edited book of essays, Land and Freedom: Law, Property and the British Diaspora, is in press

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Ann Parsonson is Senior Lecturer in History at the University of Canterbury, New Zealand. Since the late 1980s she has worked with Maori in respect of their claims against the Crown, presenting historical reports on behalf of both Ngai Tahu and the Taranaki tribes in Waitangi Tribunal hearings, and providing historical research for the Tainui Settlement of 1995.

David Philips is Associate Professor in History at the University of Melbourne. He was born in South Africa and educated there and at Oxford University. He has published extensively on law and policing in British and Australian history and is also engaged in the collaborative research project on comparative colonial states, to be published with the title Grounds For Dispute.

Robert Reynolds is a Postdoctoral Fellow in History at the University of Sydney, working jointly on the large research project Grounds for Dispute, tracing the comparative franchise status of indigenous people in British settler societies.

Shurlee Swain teaches history at the Australian Catholic University in Melbourne. She has been the recipient of a number of large research grants and has published extensively on welfare and social justice history, including Single Mothers and Their Children. She, too, is currently involved in the collaborative research project Grounds For Dispute.

Christopher Tomlins has a Ph.D. in American history from Johns Hopkins University. He has taught at La Trobe University and has been a research fellow at the American Bar Foundation since 1992. He was recently awarded the American Historical Association's Littleton-Griswold Fund Fellowship for Research in American Legal History, and has published Law, Labor and Ideology in the Early American Republic (1993) which was awarded the J. Willard Hurst Prize of the Law and Society Association. He is the editor of the Law and History Review.

Mark Walters wrote his doctoral dissertation at University College, Oxford, on Aboriginal customs under British law in Colonial Canada. He has published work on indigenous peoples and law in the Queen's Law Journal, the University of Toronto Law Journal and the Osgoode Hall Law Journal. He now teaches in the Faculty of Law, Queen's University, Canada.

John Weaver is Professor of History and former Dean of Graduate Studies at McMaster University, Hamilton, Canada. He has published extensively on law and history in leading international journals.

Nancy Wright has published interdisciplinary studies of law and literature in journals such as English Literary History and the Australian Journal of Legal History. She is Director of the Research Centre for the Interdisciplinary Study of Property Rights at the University of Newcastle, where she and Andrew Buck convened 'Land and Freedom', the 18th Annual Conference of the Australia and New Zealand Law and History Society.