NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Jocelyn Alexander is lecturer in the department of Historical Studies, Bristol University and a co-author, with JoAnn McGregor and Terence Ranger, of Violence and Memory: One hundred years in the 'dark forests' of Matabeleland (2000). She is currently editor of the Journal of Southern African Studies and is working on a history of the Zambezi hinterland.

Saul Dubow is reader in history at the School of African and Asian Studies, University of Sussex. In addition to a number of edited volumes, he is author of Racial Segregation and the Origins of Apartheid in South Africa, 1919–36 (1989) and Scientific Racism in Modern South Africa (1995).

Patrick Harries is associate professor of history at the University of Cape Town. Author of Work, Culture, and Identity: Migrant labourers in Mozambique and South Africa, c.1860–1910 (1994), he has written extensively about the politics of identity and ethnicity in this region, as well as on the work of the missionary anthropologist H. A. Junod.

Susanne Klausen's 1999 doctoral dissertation from Queen's University, Kingston, is about the formation of a national birth-control movement and the establishment of contraceptive clinics in South Africa during the 1930s. She is interested in reproductive politics, past and present, both in southern Africa and in Canada, and has published in the Journal of Southern African Studies.

Shula Marks is professor in the history of southern Africa at the School of Oriental and African Studies, London University. She has written about many aspects of South Africa, including health and nursing. Amongst her publications in this field are Divided Sisterhood: Class race and gender in the South African nursing profession (1994).

Dawn Nell completed her history honours and masters degrees at the University of Cape Town in 1997–98. She is now a doctoral student at St Antony's College, University of Oxford, working on the history of game farming in South Africa.

Deborah Posel is Director of the Institute for Social and Economic Research at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. She has published widely on the nature of the apartheid state and is the author of The Making of Apartheid 1948–1961 (1991).

Keith Shear is lecturer in African Politics at the Centre of West African Studies, University of Birmingham. His contribution in this volume draws on a recently completed history doctorate from Northwestern University, Chicago, on policing and state formation in early twentieth-century South Africa. He has published in Gender and History.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

William Kelleher Storey received his doctorate in history from Johns Hopkins University in 1993. Author of Science and Power in Colonial Mauritius (1997) and Writing History: A guide for students (1999), he is currently a visiting assistant professor of history at Millsaps College, Jackson, Mississippi.