Notes on contributors

David J. Appleby has been Lecturer in Early Modern British History at the University of Nottingham since 2006. He is the author of Black Bartholomew's Day: Preaching, Polemic and Restoration Nonconformity (Manchester University Press, 2007), which was awarded the Richard L. Greaves Prize by the International John Bunyan Society in 2010. He has also written several articles on veteran politics and military welfare during the British Civil Wars and their aftermath. He is a Co-Investigator on the Arts and Humanities Research Council-funded project entitled 'Welfare, Conflict and Memory during and after the English Civil Wars'.

Ian Atherton is Senior Lecturer in History at Keele University. He is currently working on the memory of conflict, attitudes to the fallen, and burial and memorialisation as well as the history of early modern British cathedrals. He has written numerous articles on the civil wars in the Midlands and was the editor of The 1630s: Interdisciplinary Essays on Culture and Politics in the Caroline Era (Manchester University Press, 2006).

Eric Gruber von Arni is Honorary Visiting Fellow in the Centre for English Local History at the University of Leicester. Eric retired from his career in the British Army with the rank of Colonel in 1996, having served as the Army's Director of Nursing Studies at the Royal Army Medical College in London. He then undertook doctoral research into hospital care, surgery and military welfare during the civil wars and Interregnum at the University of Portsmouth. This research appeared in his first monograph, entitled Justice to the Maimed Soldier (Ashgate, 2001), which was followed by a sequel, Hospital Care and the British Standing Army, 1660-1714 (Ashgate, 2006). Eric was Co-Guest Curator of the 'Battle-Scarred' exhibition at the National Civil War Centre.

Andrew Hopper is Associate Professor in English Local History at the University of Leicester. He is best known for his two monographs Turncoats and Renegadoes: Changing Sides during the English Civil Wars (Oxford University Press, 2012), and 'Black Tom': Sir Thomas Fairfax and the English Revolution (Manchester University Press, 2007). He was Co-Guest Curator of the 'Battle-Scarred' exhibition at the National Civil War Centre. He is now an Academic Director of the National Civil War Centre and the Principal Investigator of the Arts and Humanities Research Council-funded project entitled 'Welfare, Conflict and Memory during and after the English Civil Wars'.

Stuart B. Jennings is Free Church Chaplain at the University of Warwick. He undertook a doctorate at Nottingham Trent University examining nonconformity in seventeenth-century Nottinghamshire. He is the author of numerous journal articles discussing Newark's civil-war experiences alongside his book 'These Uncertain Tymes': Newark and the Civilian Experience of the Civil Wars, 1640–1660 (Nottinghamshire County Council, 2009).

Richard Jones is Associate Professor in Landscape History at the University of Leicester. His research examines the changing relationships between the people and the land in medieval England. He is the author of The Medieval Natural World (Routledge, 2013), and is the Principal Investigator of the Leverhulme Trust-funded project entitled 'Flood and Flow: Place Names and the Changing Hydrology of River Systems'.

Chris R. Langley is Senior Lecturer in Early Modern British History at Newman University. He is an expert on religion, the Covenanters and the Scottish experience of the civil wars. He is the author of Worship, Civil War and Community, 1638–1660 (Routledge, 2015) and the editor of The Minutes of the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, 1648–1659 (Boydell, 2016).

Ismi Pells is Postdoctoral Research Fellow and Project Manager of the Arts and Humanities Research Council-funded project entitled 'Welfare, Conflict and Memory during and after the English Civil Wars' at the University of Leicester. Before that she was an Associate Research Fellow in the Centre for Medical History at the University of Exeter on the Wellcome Trust-funded project, the 'Medical World of Early Modern England, Ireland and Wales, c. 1500–1715'. Her doctorate was awarded by the University of Cambridge in 2014 for research on the life and career of the parliamentarian general, Philip Skippon.

Erin Peters is Lecturer in Early Modern History at Gloucestershire University. She was awarded her PhD at the University of Worcester in 2015, and is the author of Commemoration and Oblivion in Royalist Print Culture, 1658–1667

(Palgrave Macmillan, 2017). She has also published several articles on trauma and the memory of the civil wars. Her long-term research encompasses an interdisciplinary study of the impact of civil war-related psychological trauma on medical and psychological theories between 1642 and 1681.

Stephen M. Rutherford is Senior Lecturer in Molecular Cell Biology in the School of Biosciences at Cardiff University. He is Deputy Director of Undergraduate Education and a National Teaching Fellow. Stephen teaches genetics, molecular cell biology, biotechnology and the history of the scientific method. Stephen also teaches an elective course to medical students on the history of military surgery.

Hannah Worthen is Postdoctoral Research Associate on the 'Gender, Place and Memory, 1400–1900' project at the University of Hull. Her PhD was awarded at the University of Leicester in 2017, funded by an Arts and Humanities Research Council Collaborative Doctoral Award with The National Archives. It examined the experiences of war widows in mid-seventeenth-century England, with special reference to Kent and Sussex. Hannah is a Trustee of the Battle of Worcester Society and the author of several articles on military welfare and war widows.