Women poets of the English Civil War has been several years in the making, and has involved numerous delightful collaborations, not least that between the two editors. We would like to thank Elizabeth Clarke for her early discussions, and all of our colleagues who have encouraged us to edit this anthology. Those who have supported it along the way are too numerous to list, but we could particularly like to thank Marie-Louise Coolahan, Alice Eardley, Elizabeth Hageman, Pamela Hammons, Peter C. Herman, Laura Knoppers, Paul Salzman, Nigel Smith, Mihoko Suzuki, Margaret Thickstun, and Gillian Wright. The Society for the Study of Early Modern Women and its members have done so much to foster research in this area, and we are grateful to our colleagues there for their encouragement and support.

Sarah Ross would like to thank Elizabeth Gray, Nikki Hessel, and Ingrid Horrocks, and her colleagues in the Early Modern Women's Research Network at the University of Newcastle, particularly Patricia Pender for discussion and contention over the politics of modernisation. Paul Salzman has provided wise counsel on editorial practice, and the contributors to our volume Editing Early Modern Women have taught me much about the politics of editing women's texts. I have also learned much from discussion of the anthology with colleagues at 'Editing Early Texts: Practice and Protocol' (Wellington, 2012), 'Katherine Philips 350' (Dublin, 2014), and the ANZAMEMS biennial conference in Brisbane (2015).

Elizabeth Scott-Baumann would like to thank Alice Eardley, Jonathan Healey, Sarah Lewis, Mary Ann Lund, and David Norbrook. Massey University provided a Visiting Research Fellowship in 2012, and the Leverhulme Trust's generous Early Career Fellowship 2012–15 allowed time for this alongside other projects. King's College London has provided financial and collegial support of many kinds, and gratitude is due to successive heads of department Jo McDonagh and Richard Kirkland and all members of the London Shakespeare Centre.

It is only fitting for a student-focused anthology that a number of postgraduate students have provided invaluable assistance. The anthology would not have been completed without the editorial assistance of Jake Arthur, Hannah Crummé, Bonnie Etherington, and Leigh McLennon. Clare Whitehead was an exemplary postdoctoral research assistant. We would particularly like to thank Bonnie for her work in the initial preparation of the texts, and Clare and Jake for their efforts in the anthology's final stages. We are also more broadly indebted to discussion of the poems in this anthology with our undergraduate and graduate students at King's College London, Massey University, and Victoria University of Wellington: many a line we think of in fresh and fascinating ways thanks to their questions and insights.

We have received invaluable financial assistance from King's College London, Massey University, and the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences at Victoria University of Wellington. Permission for images from Hester Pulter's manuscript has been graciously provided by the University of Leeds Library. Nottinghamshire Archives DD/Huz is the copyright of the Hutchinson family, and we are grateful to them and to the Team Manager: Archives and Local Studies of Nottinghamshire Archives for permission to reproduce extracts.

We would like to thank Matthew Frost at Manchester University Press for taking on this project, and for his patience and support. Fiona Little was an astute, rigorous, and efficient copy editor and Danielle Shepherd an equally meticulous and thoughtful production editor. We are very grateful for their work on the book.

Finally, thanks to the Scott-Baumann family, Benjie, Edward, and William Way, and to Andru, Milly, and Henry Isac, all of whom have lived with and supported this project and all the others.
