Acknowledgements

There are a number of people we would specifically like to thank for their help and support while we were writing this book.

First and foremost, we would like to thank the University of the West of Scotland for its continuing support over a number of years, and in particular those colleagues who provided us with advice, comments and feedback. We are also grateful to our undergraduate students who provided comments and feedback on the modules that we taught and that have informed much of the book's content. Our thanks, in particular, to five students – David, Holli, Kerry, Megan and Taylor – who read some of our draft chapters and gave us initial feedback.

We would also like to thank all the members of the Scottish academic community and those wider members of Scotland's civil society who have contributed to the debates surrounding the concepts, ideas and issues we discuss in this book. The old cliché of academic work is that we stand on the shoulders of giants; well, this work stands on the shoulders of many, many people over many, many years.

We are indebted to David Torrance and the late Duncan McTavish for contributing their chapters to the book. Duncan's death, just after he had completed the chapter, was a blow to us all.

Finally, our thanks to the staff at Manchester University Press, notably Tony Mason (who went along with our proposal) and Rob Byron and Jon de Peyer (who have seen it to fruition), as well as our anonymous reviewers.

Any errors in the text are, of course, entirely our responsibility!
