Acknowledgements

A work of this kind is not a single endeavour and there are a number of parties to thank for what is on its pages. First of all, my thanks to the original participants of the CISD colloquium 'Sport and Diplomacy: Message, Mode and Metaphor'.¹ The conference and the discourse it captured spawned many academic relationships and three published outputs: the first was a special edition of the academic journal Diplomacy and Statecraft (27, 2016), and then, alongside this volume, a book, edited by Dr Heather L. Dichter, looking particularly at Soccer and Diplomacy (Cornell University Press, forthcoming). Heather L. Dichter deserves particular thanks for the production of this volume. Her dynamism of thought and action proved a suitable foil to this endeavour. Her contribution is manifest in the work presented here as it is in her stellar contribution to the field of Sport History.

I would also like to thank Dr Dan Plesch for his unswerving support in developing the Sport and Diplomacy project; and for the rest of my CISD colleagues who have provided institutional support for the endeavours. Inspiration has been drawn from students on the CISD MA module 'Sport and Diplomacy: More than a Game' since its inception in 2011. The rich discussion, particularly from the female majority of the student body, has been richly rewarding in furthering my own thinking. Particular mention must go to the two outstanding Associate Tutors of the class: Verity Postlethwaite and Omar Sahla. Their contribution to the field of Sport and Diplomacy is still to come. Finally, it would be remiss of me not to mention my original and ongoing collaborators with whom I began the Sport and Diplomacy project in 2011: Dr Geoff Pigman and Dr Stuart Murray.

Finally, rather than repeat the trope that 'any errors that remain are my sole responsibility', I would gently suggest that deciding whether the manuscript is error-free is an exercise left for the reader.

J. Simon Rofe
July 2017

Note

- 1 The conference was held under the auspices of the MA Global Diplomacy Programme, 3–4 July 2015.