Acknowledgements

This English-language edition owes a great deal to the weighty critical remarks and advice of several colleagues. Above all, the authors would like to express their profound gratitude to Radhika Desai, editor of the series Geopolitical Economy and Professor at the Department of Political Studies at the University of Manitoba, who performed a huge and systematic labour in editing and making corrections to our book, as well as in adapting the text for English-language readers. Her contribution is difficult to overstate.

Another critically important contribution to the work on the book was made by our young colleague Olga Barashkova. Without her help in the selection and presentation of the materials in the book, and also her valuable advice, this work would not have taken on its pleasing appearance and would not have contained an adequate range of sources and data. We extend our sincere and profound gratitude to them all. Special thanks are also due to Renfrey Clarke, our comrade and translator for close to thirty years.

Dialogues over the past quarter-century with foreign colleagues from the countries of Western and Eastern Europe, North and South America, and Asia (above all, China and Japan) have provided a significant impulse for our work. We are grateful to our friends Samir Amin, Elizabeth Bowman, Michael Brie, Galina Dubrovskaya, Cheng Enfu, Alan Freeman, James Galbraith, Chen Hong, David Kotz, Tamas Krausz, David Laibman, David Lane, Rut Stolyarova, Robert Stone, Yuzo Tanaka, and Immanuel Wallerstein (some of whom, sadly, are no longer with us). We also express our thanks to colleagues from the World Association for Political Economy, the International Initiative for Promoting Political Economy, the Radical Philosophy Association, the Union for Radical Political Economy of the USA, and Left Forum, as well as to all the social movements, organisations, and foundations that have helped us to assimilate foreign thinking on social topics and to present our ideas to the court of the international scholarly community.

The authors were trained in the Department of Political Economy of the Faculty of Economics of Lomonosov Moscow State University, working in close collaboration with the Institute of Comparative Studies of Socio-Economic Systems of the Faculty of Economics. The leaders of this collective over the decades have included the founder of the university's school of political economy, Nikolay Tsagolov; Valery Radaev, who continued Tsagolov's tradition; and the present head of the department, Anatoly Porokhovskiy, who is further developing the main achievements of the school in our difficult times. They turned us into researchers oriented above all towards resolving fundamental theoretical questions. We have also gained a great deal from numerous dialogues with scholars from a range of Russian centres of research and education. In recent years, these people have included our colleagues from the International Political Economy Association of the Post-Soviet Countries and the Free Economic Society of Russia, led by the author of the new theory of 'Noonomy', Professor Sergey Bodrunov.

We cannot fail to express our gratitude to all those who, in the course of the past years, have aided in the preparation of this book. Above all, these include our comrades who during various periods have been members of the editorial boards of the journals Al'ternativy (Alternatives) and Voprosy politicheskoy ekonomii (Problems in political economy), some of whom also belong to the post-Soviet school of critical Marxism: Urak Aliev, Vadim Belov, Lyudmila Bulavka-Buzgalina, Vasily Chekmarev, Ruslan Dzarasov, Rafkat Gaysin, Ruslan Grinberg, Leonid Istyagin, Kaysyn Khubiev, Aleksandr Khudokormov, Petr Lemeshchenko, Vladimir Mironov, Karen Momdzhyan, Aleksandr Nekipelov, Viktor Ryazanov, Viktor Tarasevich, Sergey Tolkachev, and especially our close friends Mikhail Pavlov, Emil Rudyk, Boris Slavin, Andrey Sorokin, Mikhail Voeikov, and Natalya Yakovleva. An enormous contribution was also made by now-departed comrades who worked on Al'ternativy (Alternatives): the great Soviet authority on foreign Marxism Mily Gretskey, the outstanding philosopher of culture Nahl Zlobin, and the theoretician and activist of the social liberation struggle of the peoples of Latin America Kiva Maydanik.

We have discussed the main arguments put forward in this book extensively over twenty years in seminars of the post-Soviet school of critical Marxism operating under the patronage of the First Deputy Chairperson of the Committee on Education of the State Duma, our old friend Professor Oleg Smolin, and in the meetings and conferences of the Centre for Modern Marxist Studies of the Faculty of Philosophy of Lomonosov Moscow State University.

Our book also owes its existence to the help of our young colleagues who are representatives of the new generation of the post-Soviet school of critical Marxism, Olga Barashkova, Olga Lemeshonok, Gleb Maslov, Tamara Stepanova, and Natalya Yakovleva, and also of other young people sympathetic to our ideas who at various times have participated in our dialogues and helped with our work. These latter include Gulnara Aitova, Dmitry

Khromov, Larisa Ozhogina, and many, many other young assistants. We also extend our gratitude to the students of Lomonosov Moscow State University, discussions with whom helped give rise to a considerable number of the ideas put forward in our text.

To a great degree, the authors of this book were able to write it thanks to the fact that their young colleagues and students worked in dialogue with them. Of these young people, only a handful have chosen the path of critical Marxism, but we are sure they will become outstanding scholars whose works will advance scholarship. We are grateful to them for their rigorous criticism, and we hope they will surpass their teachers in the near future.

We would also add that we wrote Twenty-first-century capital not so much in the quiet of our studies (indeed, in the strict sense of the word, we do not have any) as in the pauses between constant social and political activity. The ‘Alternatives’ movement; the networks ‘Education for Everybody’ and ‘Congress of Workers in Education, Science and Culture’; the constant initiatives of the alterglobalists; and informational and other assistance to independent left organisations in Russia and abroad have all been, and will remain, no less important for us than theoretical and scholarly work. Further, it is precisely and exclusively thanks to our involvement in the practice of social creativity that we are able to delve directly into the relationships of alienation and to analyse them. Our analyses are not based on generalisations derived from books but flow from our own experience, and from that of our comrades in the struggle for social liberation.

Now to our very closest and most important assistants, comrades, critics, and sources of inspiration. This book has come into being because we were raised by our attentive, communist-minded parents: Nina Buzgalina and Vladimir Buzgalin and Energiya Kolganova and Ivan Kolganov. It is also due to the fact that at the sources of our work stood our teachers – our instructor and research supervisor Nikolay Khessin and the great scholar and militant Ernest Mandel.

And one thing more: one of the authors of this book, Aleksandr Buzgalin, has been fortunate enough in his life to have met Lyudmila Bulavka-Buzgalina, an outstanding scholar (professor at Lomonosov Moscow State University, author of more than 100 academic works published in many languages), and incomparable human being. With her, he lives, works, and creates. For this he is boundlessly thankful to her. The other author of the book, Andrey Kolganov, is endlessly grateful to his wife, without whose untiring care his work on this book would not have been possible.
