Notes on contributors

Idil Atak is an Associate Professor and the Graduate Program Director in the Department of Criminology of Ryerson University, Toronto. She is a member of the International Association for the Study of Forced Migration's executive committee and a past president of the Canadian Association for Refugee and Forced Migration Studies. She is currently conducting research funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada on the intersection of security, irregular migration, and asylum.

Jen Bagelman is a Lecturer in Human Geography at the University of Exeter. Her academic and activist work critically examines how displacement is produced through exclusionary citizenship and bordering practices. She is also deeply interested in how people mobilise to enact more loving geopolitics. In particular her research explores how anti-colonial sanctuary movements challenge (and sometimes inadvertently reproduce) the hostile treatment of refugees and other displaced peoples. Her book Sanctuary City: A Suspended State (Palgrave Macmillan, 2016) explores this topic.

Harald Bauder is Professor in the Department of Geography & Environmental Studies at Ryerson University, Toronto. He is the director of the MA Program in Immigration and Settlement Studies and the founding academic director of the Ryerson Centre for Immigration and Settlement. He has edited five volumes and published four monographs, 72 articles in peer-reviewed journals, and multiple book chapters, reports, and op-eds in the popular media. In 2015 he received the prestigious Konrad Adenauer Research Award from the Royal Society of Canada and the A. v. Humboldt Foundation.

Jonathan Darling is an Assistant Professor in Human Geography at Durham University. Prior to this he was Senior Lecturer in Human Geography at the University of Manchester, and the director of the Cities, Politics, Economies Research Group. His research focuses on the spatial politics of asylum, sanctuary, and the urban dynamics of forced migration. He has co-edited two volumes and published 18 articles in international journals, alongside numerous book chapters and public commentaries. In 2012 he was awarded an ESRC Future Research Leaders Award to conduct research on the UK's dispersal system of housing and support for asylum seekers and refugees.

Graham Hudson is an Associate Professor in the Department of Criminology at Ryerson University, Toronto. He holds a BA (Hons) in History and Philosophy from York University, a JD from the University of Toronto, an LLM from Queen's University, and a PhD from Osgoode Hall Law School. His current research includes the sanctuary city movement in Canada, the criminalisation of (irregular) migration, national security law and policy, and the judicial administration of secret trials in Canada and the UK.

Janika Kuge is a PhD candidate in political geography at the Institute of Human Geography in Freiburg, Germany. She has a state's degree in geography, German linguistics and philosophy and is now working in the Department of Sustainable Development and Geography of Economy. Her special interest in the geographies of marginalised groups in society and critical theory was sparked by a long history of activism in refugee solidarity alliances.

Valeria Raimondi is a PhD candidate in urban studies at the Gran Sasso Science Institute/GSSI-Cities, L'Aquila, Italy. She has a BA in International Cooperation and Development, and a Master's in Geography (University of Bologna). Her research focuses on the self-organised spaces of refugees and asylum seekers in Greece and autonomous geographies.

Ben Rogaly teaches in the Department of Geography at the University of Sussex. He has a long-standing research interest in migration in England and India and is co-author (with Becky Taylor) of Moving Histories of Class and Community: Identity, Place and Belonging in Contemporary England (Palgrave, 2011). He previously held an Arts and Humanities Research Council Fellowship entitled 'Places for All? A Multi-Media Investigation of Citizenship, Work and Belonging in a Fast-Changing Provincial City', from which he published in numerous outlets including Society and Space, Geoforum, Sociological Review, and Identities. He is currently one of a team of investigators on the AHRC-funded Creative Interruptions project and is writer-in-residence at Metal (Peterborough).

Sheryl-Ann Simpson is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Geography and Environmental Studies at Carleton University. Her work focuses on the production of place, the ways in which state and resident actions interact in and on places and landscapes, including built environments. She focuses these broad questions through an examination of immigration and settlement in Canada, the US, and northern Europe. She also works in the area of spatial methods more broadly, linking qualitative, quantitative, visual, and participatory methods.

M. Anne Visser is an Associate Professor of Community and Regional Development in the Department of Human Ecology at the University of California, Davis. Her research interests include the socio-economic implications of the informalisation of work and employment, low-wage and informal labour markets, and the impact of state policy and socially based labour-market interventions on economic opportunity. This research specifically includes a focus on policies related to migrant workers in the global informal economy. Her research has recently been published in Urban Geography, Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, and Work Employment & Society.
