Notes on contributors

David J. Baker is Professor of English at the University of Hawai'i. He is the author of Between Nations: Shakespeare, Spenser, Marvell, and the Question of Britain (Stanford University Press, 1997) and the co-editor of British Identities and English Renaissance Literature (Cambridge University Press, 2002).

Mark Thornton Burnett is Professor of Renaissance Studies at Queens University, Belfast. He is the author of Constructing 'Monsters' in Shakespearean Drama and Early Modern Culture (Palgrave, 2002) and Masters and Servants in English Renaissance Drama and Culture: Authority and Obedience (Macmillan, 1997), the editor of The Complete Poems of Christopher Marlowe (Everyman, 2000) and The Complete Plays of Christopher Marlowe (Everyman, 1999) and the co-editor of Shakespeare, Film, Fin de Siècle (Macmillan, 2000), Shakespeare and Ireland: History, Politics, Culture (Macmillan, 1997) and New Essays on 'Hamlet' (AMS Press, 1994).

Robert Crawford is Professor of Modern Scottish Literature and Head of the School of English at the University of St Andrews. His collections of poetry include The Tip of My Tongue (Cape, 2003); his critical books include The Modern Poet (Oxford University Press, 2001). Among books he has edited are The New Penguin Book of Scottish Verse (with Mick Imlah, Penguin, 2000) and Robert Burns and Cultural Authority (Edinburgh University Press, 1997).

Elizabeth Fowler is Associate Professor of English Literature at the University of Virginia and the author of Literary Character: The Human Figure in Early English Writing (Cornell University Press, 2003).

Lidia Garbin has written a PhD on Scott and Shakespeare. She has given papers and published essays on the subject and on Scott's influence on his contemporaries and successors. She currently lives and teaches in North Italy.

Andrew Hadfield is Professor of English at the University of Sussex. He is the author of a number of books, most recently, Shakespeare and Renaissance Politics (Arden Critical Companions, 2003) and Shakespeare, Spenser and the Matter of Britain (Palgrave, 2003). He is currently working on Shakespeare and Republicanism for Cambridge University Press, and editing The History of the Irish Book: Vol. III: The Irish Book in English, 1550–1800 for Oxford University Press.

Christopher Highley is Associate Professor of English at The Ohio State University. He is the author of Shakespeare, Spenser, and the Crisis in Ireland (Cambridge University Press, 1997) and co-editor of John Foxe and his World (Ashgate, 2002). He is currently completing a book on Early Modern Catholics and national identity.

Willy Maley is Professor of Renaissance Studies at the University of Glasgow. His publications include Nation, State and Empire in English Renaissance Literature: Shakespeare to Milton (Palgrave, 2003) and Salvaging Spenser: Colonialism, Culture and Identity (Macmillan, 1997). He co-edited, with David Baker, British Identities and English Renaissance Literature (Cambridge University Press, 2002).

Andrew Murphy is Reader in English at the University of St Andrews. He is the author of Shakespeare in Print: A History and Chronology of Shakespeare Publishing (Cambridge University Press, 2003) and But the Irish Sea Betwixt Us: Ireland, Colonialism, and Renaissance Literature (University Press of Kentucky, 1999). He is the editor of The Renaissance Text: Theory, Editing, Textuality (Manchester University Press, 2000).

Neil Rhodes is Professor of English Literature and Cultural History at the University of St Andrews. He is the author, most recently, of Shakespeare and the Origins of English (Oxford University Press, 2004). His other publications include (with Jennifer Richards and Joseph Marshall) James VI and I: Selected Writings (Ashgate, 2003) and (with Jonathan Sawday) The Renaissance Computer: Knowledge Technology in the First Age of Print (Routledge, 2000).

Rebecca Rogers is a lecturer in Renaissance Literature at Oxford Brookes University. Her research interests include Shakespeare's eighteenth-century cultural history and the economic strategies of seventeenth-century playing companies.

Adrienne Scullion teaches in the Department of Theatre, Film and Television Studies at the University of Glasgow. Her research and teaching interests include Scottish cultural issues (from the eighteenth century to the post-devolution context), dramaturgy and British women playwrights.