Notes on contributors

Cora Fox is Associate Professor of English at Arizona State University, where alongside her research in early modern culture she has developed interdisciplinary programming and curricular initiatives in the health humanities. She is the author of Ovid and the Politics of Emotion in Elizabethan England (Palgrave, 2009) and co-edited (with Barbara Weiden Boyd) Approaches to Teaching the Works of Ovid and the Ovidian Tradition (MLA, 2010). She is completing a monograph on fantasies of happiness, well-being, and healthy communities in early modern English literature.

Timothy Hampton is Professor of Comparative Literature and French at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author of Fictions of Embassy: Literature and Diplomacy in Early Modern Europe (Cornell University Press, 2010) and Bob Dylan's Poetics: How the Songs Work (Zone Books, 2019). A new study, Cheerfulness: A Literary and Cultural History, is forthcoming from Zone Books in 2021.

Lalita Pandit Hogan is Professor of English at the University of Wisconsin-La Crosse and Affiliate faculty of the South Asia Center at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Her more recent research has focused on emotion studies and cognitive neuroscience, and she has published articles and book chapters on Shakespeare, Goethe, south Asian authors, Hindi cinema (some of these adaptations of Shakespeare), and comparative aesthetics. She is co-editor and contributing author of four books published by university presses, and three special issues of journals, one of which is the award-winning Shakespeare in the Age of Cognitive Neuroscience (College Literature 33.1, 2006). She is the author of A Country Without Borders: Stories and Poems of Kashmir (2Leaf Press, 2017, distributed by University of Chicago Press). She edits (with three others) a special series on Cognitive Approaches to Culture at Ohio State University Press.

Patrick Colm Hogan is a Board of Trustees Distinguished Professor at the University of Connecticut, where he is a member of the English Department, the Program in Cognitive Science, and the Program in Comparative Literary and Cultural Studies. He is the author of over twenty books, several of which treat Shakespeare, including What Literature Teaches Us About Emotion (Cambridge University Press, 2011). His recent work includes Personal Identity and Literature (Routledge, 2019) and Style in Narrative (Oxford University Press, 2021).

Bradley J. Irish is Associate Professor of English at Arizona State University, where he specializes in sixteenth-century English literature and culture. His first monograph was Emotion in the Tudor Court: Literature, History, and Early Modern Feeling (Northwestern University Press, 2018); his second, Shakespeare and Disgust: A Study in Dramatic Language, will be published by The Arden Shakespeare in 2022. His articles have appeared in journals such as Renaissance Quarterly, English Literary Renaissance, Renaissance Drama, and Modern Philology.

Ulrich Langer is Vilas Distinguished Achievement Professor of French at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. His most recent publications include Lyric in the Renaissance: From Petrarch to Montaigne (Cambridge University Press, 2015) and Les Remontrances (XVIe–XVIIIe siècles): Textes et commentaires, co-edited with Paul-Alexis Mellet (Garnier, 2021). His current research concerns the ethics and rhetoric of disagreement in the Ancien Régime, and poetic confrontations with the finite, from Virgil to Baudelaire.

Cassie M. Miura is Assistant Teaching Professor in the division of Culture, Arts, and Communication at the University of Washington Tacoma. She is currently working on a monograph titled The Humor of Skepticism: Therapeutic Laughter from Montaigne to Milton. She has published in Early Modern Culture and has essays appearing in Shakespeare and Montaigne (Edinburgh University Press, 2021) and Forming Sleep: Representing Consciousness in the English Renaissance (Penn State University Press, 2020).

Ian Frederick Moulton is President's Professor of English and Cultural History in the College of Integrative Sciences and Arts at Arizona State University. He has published widely on the representation of gender and sexuality in early modern European literature. His books include Before Pornography: Erotic Writing in Early Modern England (Oxford University Press, 2000) and Love in Print in the Sixteenth Century: The Popularization of Romance (Palgrave, 2014).

Eonjoo Park is Assistant Professor of English at Jeonbuk National University in South Korea. She has published on topics ranging from gerontological discourses and fellow-feeling in King Lear, anger and revenge in Titus Andronicus, wonder and sympathy in Oroonoko, as well as violence and commitment in the work of Edward Bond. Currently, she is working on two projects: the first on old age in Bernard Shaw's Back to Methuselah and the second on re-reading Elizabeth Cary's The Tragedy of Mariam as a revenge play.

Michael C. Schoenfeldt is the John Knott Professor of English at the University of Michigan. He is the author of Prayer and Power: George Herbert and Renaissance Courtship (University of Chicago Press, 1991), Bodies and Selves in Early Modern England (Cambridge University Press, 1999), and The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare's Poetry (Cambridge University Press, 2010). He is editor of the Blackwell Companion to Shakespeare's Sonnets (Blackwell, 2006) and John Donne in Context (Cambridge University Press, 2019). He is currently writing a book entitled Reading Seventeenth-Century Poetry and researching pain and pleasure in early modern England.

Richard Strier, Sulzberger Distinguished Service Professor Emeritus in English, Divinity, and the College of the University of Chicago, is the author of The Unrepentant Renaissance from Petrarch to Shakespeare to Milton (University of Chicago Press, 2011); Resistant Structures: Particularity, Radicalism, and Renaissance Texts (University of California Press, 1995); and Love Known: Theology and Experience in George Herbert's Poetry (University of Chicago Press, 1983). He has co-edited a number of interdisciplinary collections including Shakespeare and the Law: A Conversation Among Disciplines and Professions (University of Chicago Press, 2013). Recent and forthcoming essays are on Donne's erotic lyrics, New Historicism and formalism, and King Lear.

Leila Watkins received her PhD in English Language and Literature from the University of Michigan in 2014. Her research explores why early modern English readers and writers believed verse to be a uniquely effective form of emotional management, or consolation, and how they understood it to work. She is broadly interested in the history of emotion, poetry and poetics, religion, and community formation in early modern England. She currently works in development and communications at CollegeSpring, a San Francisco Bay Area nonprofit that promotes equitable college access for students who are historically underrepresented in higher education.

Paul Joseph Zajac is an Assistant Professor of English at McDaniel College. His articles on early modern literature have appeared in Philological Quarterly, Studies in Philology, Studies in English Literature, and English Literary Renaissance. He is currently writing a book-length study of Reformation concepts of contentment in English Renaissance literature.
