Preface

The research for this book was begun as part of the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) project 'Identities and Social Action', directed by Professor Margaret Wetherell and supported by ESRC grant RES-148-25-0054. Chapters 1–6 are the work of Professor Sean Connolly, Chapter 7 of Dr John Nagle and Chapters 8 and 9 of Dr Dominic Bryan. Chapter 6 incorporates some material prepared by Dr Gillian McIntosh as part of her work as a research officer on the project.

Sean Connolly would like to thank Dr Paul Harron, Dr Catherine Hirst, Dr Alice Johnston, Mr Stuart Irwin and Dr Jonathan Wright, former research students who have worked with him on Belfast topics, and from whom he has learned a great deal. He would also like to thank the members of the informal Queen's University discussion group on urban history – Dr Kieran Connell, Dr James Davis, Dr Elaine Farrell, Dr Tom Hulme, Professor Sean O'Connell, Dr Olwen Purdue – who assisted him in getting to grips with the initially unfamiliar process of theorising space. Dr Vivienne Pollock of the Ulster Museum provided invaluable assistance with illustrations for the volume. Mavis Bracegirdle was, as always, an acute critical reader.

Dominic Bryan would like to acknowledge colleagues who worked on two other related ESRC projects. Preliminary work was undertaken under ESRC grant L219252112 with Dr Gillian McIntosh and work continued under ESRC RES-062-23-1140 in the project 'Embodying the Imagined Community: The role of collective participation in the transformation of Irish identities' with Professor Steve Reicher, Professor Orla Muldoon, Dr Clifford Stevenson, Dr Sam Pehrson, Dr Aisling O'Donnell and Dr Danielle Blaylock. He would also like to recognise the contribution and friendship of Dr Gordon Gillespie and Dr Neil Jarman, who have accompanied him to many events. Staff at the Institute of Irish Studies at Queen's University, particularly Catherine Boone, Valerie Miller and Joan Watson, carried much of the administrative load.