Notes on contributors

Charlotte Coffin is senior lecturer at Université Paris-Est Créteil Val de Marne (France) and a member of the Institut des mondes anglophone, germanique et roman (IMAGER). The author of articles and book chapters on classical mythology, the mythographers, Shakespeare and Heywood, she has co-edited Interweaving Myths in Shakespeare and his Contemporaries with Janice Valls-Russell and Agnès Lafont (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2017) and is preparing an edition of Thomas Heywood's Golden Age. She has contributed to the Dictionary of Shakespeare's Classical Mythology and is a member of the editorial board (www.shakmyth.org).

Tania Demetriou is lecturer in the Faculty of English, University of Cambridge. She works on the reception of classical texts in the early modern period, especially on literary responses to Homer in the English Renaissance. Her published work includes articles and essays on Spenser, Chapman, translation, the Elizabethan epyllion, textual scholarship and the Homeric Question, and on Gabriel Harvey's marginalia on literary texts, including his response to classical tragedy.

Katherine Heavey is lecturer in Early Modern English Literature at the University of Glasgow. Her interests include the translation, adaptation and reception of classical myth in early modern England. Her first monograph, The Early Modern Medea, was published by Palgrave in 2015. She has edited a special issue of Translation and Literature (2020), entitled 'Classical Tragedy Translated in Early Modern England', and has published articles in journals including Translation and Literature, Renaissance Studies and Comparative Drama.

Yves Peyré is emeritus professor of English literature at Université Paul-Valéry, Montpellier (France). He is general editor of the online Dictionary of Shakespeare's Classical Mythology and the online edition of Thomas Heywood's Troia Britanica (available at www.shakmyth.org). He is the author of La voix des mythes dans la tragédie élisabéthaine (Paris: CNRS Editions, 1996); William Shakespeare: 'Venus and Adonis' (Paris: Didier-Erudition, 1998); and numerous essays on classical reception, published in the UK, the USA and France.

Tanya Pollard is professor of English at Brooklyn College and the Graduate Center, City University of New York. Her research focuses on early modern plays, bodies, emotions, and responses to ancient Greek texts. Her recent books include Reader in Tragedy, co-edited with Marcus Nevitt (Oxford/New York: Bloomsbury, 2019), and Greek Tragic Women on Shakespearean Stages (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2017), which won the Roland H. Bainton Literature Book Prize. She is currently editing Ben Jonson's The Alchemist and writing about early modern actors' contributions to making plays.

Chloe Kathleen Preedy is senior lecturer in Shakespeare and Renaissance Literature at the University of Exeter. She is the author of Marlowe's Literary Scepticism: Politic Religion and Post-Reformation Polemic (Oxford: Bloomsbury, 2013), as well as various articles and book chapters on early modern literature and drama. She is currently preparing a monograph on how early modern dramatists conceived of and represented the aerial environment as part of the AHRC-funded project, 'Atmospheric Theatre: Open-Air Performance and the Environment'.

Richard Rowland is senior lecturer in Drama and English at the University of York. He has edited plays by Marlowe (Edward II for the Oxford Complete Works), George Chapman and Ben Jonson (Penguin, 1998), and Thomas Heywood (Edward IV for the Revels series, 2005). He is also the author of Thomas Heywood's Theatre, 1599–1639: Locations, Translations, and Conflict (Farnham: Ashgate, 2010), and Killing Hercules: Deianira and the Politics of Domestic Violence, from Sophocles to the War on Terror (Abingdon: Routledge, 2017).

M. L. Stapleton is Chapman Distinguished Professor of English at Purdue University, Fort Wayne, U.S.A.

Camilla Temple's research takes as its starting point the idea that Renaissance engagements with the classical tradition often contain highly sophisticated responses to contemporary traditions of materiality. She has been a research associate on the ERC-funded project 'Crossroads of knowledge in early modern England: The place of literature', at the University of Cambridge (research leading to these results has received funding from the European Research Council under the European Union's Seventh Framework Programme (FP7/2007–2013)/ERC grant agreement no 617849), and an MHRA research associate on the Thomas Browne project at the University of York. She has published on Spenser and the Greek Anthology.

Janice Valls-Russell is a principal research associate of France's National Centre for Scientific Research (CNRS), at the Institute for Research on the Renaissance, the Neo-classical Age and the Enlightenment (IRCL), Université Paul-Valéry, Montpellier. She is project coordinator and an editor of A Dictionary of Shakespeare's Classical Mythology (www.shakmyth.org). The author of articles and book chapters on early modern forms of engagement with classical mythology, she has co-edited Interweaving Myths in Shakespeare and his Contemporaries with Charlotte Coffin and Agnès Lafont (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 2017).