The idea for this volume emerged in York in the summer of 2014, under the flags that greeted the Tour de France and in the wake of a colloquium on ‘Greek texts and the early modern stage’, organised by Tania Demetriou and Tanya Pollard. It gathered strength in a conference on Thomas Heywood held the following, memorably hot summer in Montpellier. It was largely inspired by the now complete online edition of Heywood’s epic, Troia Britanica, under the careful and imaginative guidance of Yves Peyré. Work on this edition has uncovered the range of Heywood’s enthusiastic and scholarly familiarity with the classics by tracing his reading habits and the way these shaped his writing. Above all, however, this volume has drawn on the ample enthusiasm, scholarship and commitment of its contributors to whom we are profoundly grateful.

We are deeply indebted to our institutions (past and present) for enabling us to organise those conferences. The University of York’s Centre for Renaissance and Early Modern Studies offered practical and intellectual support without which that original gathering of classically minded early modernists would have been impossible. The support of Montpellier’s Institute for Research on the Renaissance, the Neo-Classical Age and the Enlightenment (IRCL), a joint research unit of the French National Centre for Scientific Research (CNRS) and Université Paul-Valéry, Montpellier, has been unfailing, and we owe special thanks to its director, Nathalie Vienne-Guerrin. At Cambridge, we were able to organise crucial co-working sessions on the fringes of another colloquium held in 2019, under the umbrella of the Cambridge Society for Neo-Latin Studies. The Humanities and Social Sciences Institute of France’s CNRS made this possible by awarding Janice Valls-Russell a generous international mobility grant.

Over the course of putting the book together, we have relied on the patience of many a helpful librarian at the Bibliothèque nationale de France in Paris, the British Library, the Shakespeare Institute Library, the Warburg Institute, the National Maritime Museum Library at Greenwich, as well as at the libraries of our respective institutions, Cambridge University Library and Bibliothèque interuniversitaire de Montpellier. The support and advice of Matthew Frost and everyone at Manchester University Press have greatly contributed to making this a stimulating and enjoyable journey.

We are particularly grateful to colleagues and friends who have read drafts, discussed ideas that ended up formative to this volume or cheered us along the way: they include Yves Peyré, Charlotte Coffin, Rachel Darmon, Anna-Maria Hartmann, Katherine Heavey, Emily Mayne, Victoria Moul, Daniel Yabut and Matthew Reynolds. We are very grateful to Carla Suthren for helping us prepare the index. We would like to thank other friends for their support – Brigitte Belin, Nicoleta Cinpoes, Vanessa Kuhner-Blaha, Elliot Leader, Florence March, Subha Mukherji, Boika Sokolova, Andrew Taylor – and our respective families for their patience, encouragement, and for making us laugh. Without Charles Martindale and Yves Peyré, who brought us together in a mythological encounter many years ago, the journey would have been unthinkable. To them we owe a deep debt of gratitude, intellectual and personal.
