Acknowledgements

It is a pleasure to thank the institutions, and some of the people, who have helped bring Harley Manuscript Geographies to fruition.

The Department of English at the University of Texas at Austin has been an excellent place at which to develop and complete this project. In practical terms, UT provided a semester-long Faculty Research Assignment, which I used to draft the Introduction; granted me three years of research funds through its College of Liberal Arts Humanities Research Award programme; subsidized travel to professional meetings; and helped defray publication costs, with a timely subvention grant from the Office of the Vice President for Research, plus Index funding from the Chair of the Department of English. More nebulously but just as importantly, my home institution has furnished me with a host of generous and brilliant fellow travellers. I have been enriched by more UT-Austin colleagues than can be listed, but prominent among those who have influenced this volume, whether with content feedback, publication advice, or other orders of professional support, are: Samuel Baker, Phil Barrish, Douglas Bruster, Tom Cable, Mia Carter, Larry Carver, James Cox, Elizabeth Cullingford, Yoav Di-Capua, Brian Doherty, Alan Friedman, Andrea Golden, Melissa Heide, Geraldine Heng, Zachary Hines, Steven Hoelscher, Brad Humphries, Coleman Hutchison, Martin Kevorkian, Mark Longaker, Roger Louis, Allen MacDuffie, Julia Mickenberg, Lisa Moore, Domino Perez, Wayne Rebhorn, Elizabeth Richmond-Garza, Elizabeth Scala, Cecilia Smith-Morris, Christopher Taylor, Joseph Taylor, Jennifer Wilks, Hannah Wojciehowski, and Marjorie Curry Woods. I have also benefited from working with many excellent graduate and undergraduate students, who are too numerous to list but deserve mention for their collective knack of giving back more than they receive, in terms intellectual and otherwise.

Colleagues from other universities have also provided crucial support, by extending invitations to conferences, symposia, and workshops; by sponsoring fellowship and grant applications; and by offering transformative feedback upon work-in-progress. My thanks for their collegiality, in all cases conspicuous and in some cases extending over many years, to Jenny Adams, Elizabeth Allen, Christopher Baswell, Heather Blurton, Martin Camargo, Lisa Cooper, Rita Copeland, Matthew Fisher, John Ganim, Alfred Hiatt, Patricia Clare Ingham, Erin Felicia Labbie, Kathy Lavezzo, David Lawton, Keith Lilley, David Matthews, Asa Simon Mittman, Jessica Rosenfeld, Catherine Sanok, Sylvia Tomasch, David Wallace, and Gary Wilder. Early in my work on the material that would become this book, I had the honour of holding a Solmsen Post-Doctoral Fellowship at the University of Wisconsin-Madison's Institute for Research in the Humanities. Ensuring my family and me a warm welcome in Madison were Susan Stanford Friedman; fellow Solmsen Fellows Brian Sandberg and David Goldstein; and two unusually hospitable UW local medievalists, Kellie Robertson and Lisa Cooper.

Much of Harley Manuscript Geographies began in presentation form. Sections of Chapter 1 were delivered at the University of California Santa Barbara, the University of Minnesota Twin Cities, and the University of Texas at Austin. Chapter 2 received its first airing at the New Chaucer Society (Reykjavík)—special thanks to Kathy Lavezzo and Asa Mittman—with important follow-up at the Medieval Writing Workshop, convened by William Kuskin and Tiffany Beechy at the University of Colorado Boulder. Chapter 3 had its debut at an Ahmanson Foundation Conference sponsored jointly by UCLA's Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies and the Getty Center (thank you Matthew Fisher, Zrinka Stahuljak, and Heather Blurton). Portions of Chapter 4 were delivered at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign (thank you Martin Camargo and Robert W. Barrett, Jr.) and at Washington University St Louis (thank you Jessica Rosenfeld and David Lawton). Material that would grow into this book's Epilogue was delivered at the New Chaucer Society's Swansea meeting (thank you Patricia Clare Ingham). Other material related to the Harley manuscript and/or Hereford Cathedral was presented at UMass Amherst (thank you Jenny Adams), the University of Michigan (thank you Catherine Sanok and Peggy McCracken), and the University of Wisconsin-Madison (as above). Space prohibits a full listing of all those whose engaged response, at these and other venues, has improved my work, but I offer my humble appreciation nonetheless.

Chapter 1 was published in earlier form, by Studies in the Age of Chaucer (2009), as was a previous version of Chapter 3, by Exemplaria (2015). Deep thanks for their reserves of editorial deftness, and good-humoured patience, to David Matthews at SAC and to Patricia Clare Ingham and Noah Guynn at EXM, as well as to the excellent reviewers they procured. Two paragraphs of my Epilogue have been adapted from an article ('Mapping Medieval Utopia') that appeared originally in the Journal of Medieval and Early Modern Studies (2006), under the guest editorship of Patricia C. Ingham and Karma Lochrie. I am grateful to these journals for their permission to use revised versions of that earlier work.

The archival research underlying Harley Manuscript Geographies was conducted at Hereford Cathedral Library, Worcester Cathedral Library, the Hereford and Worcester County Record Office, Shropshire Record Office, the British Library, and the Bodleian Library. My thanks to curatorial staff at these institutions for their helpful expertise, and for granting access to original materials. Preparation of my draft manuscript for submission to press was aided and abetted by Melissa Heide, who brought admirable order to a diffuse mass of material. It has been a pleasure to interact with editors Meredith Carroll and Alun Richards at Manchester University Press, while especially warm appreciations are due to David Matthews and his fellow series editors, Anke Bernau and James Paz. I cannot thank the anonymous reviewers arranged by the Manchester Medieval Literature and Culture series enough, for their insightful readings, sensible suggestions, and disciplinary balance. Christopher Cannon offered wise feedback at an important moment, while Wayne Rebhorn helped with early project formulation, and Sam Baker, Hannah Wojciehowski, and Jorie Woods improved specific chapters substantially. Liz Scala provided invaluable subfield support and practical aid throughout; I especially appreciate her help in conceptualizing my Introduction. In addition to serving as a general sounding board and writing consultant, Coleman Hutchison did heroic work at extremely short notice, in coaxing the Introduction and Epilogue into final shape. The staunch friendship of colleagues, it turns out, is an indispensable factor at every stage in the scholarly process.

A number of family members—including Janet Birkholz, Dean Birkholz, Yvette Mickenberg, Ira Mickenberg, Patricia Fahey, Risa Mickenberg, Becky Birkholz, Wendy Birkholz, and Christopher Birkholz (plus spouses and children)—deserve deep thanks for helping to make this book possible through their steady love and generous hospitality.

Last in this litany of thanks, but first in importance, come my own three levedis: Middle English for ‘beloved ladies’: Lena Birkholz, Edie Birkholz, and Julia Mickenberg. Not even in the elegant phrasings of the heartfelt Harley Lyrics are there words fit to express the depth of my gratitude. If love takes us places, as the vernacular lyric poems in the Harley manuscript assert, thank you Lena, Edie, and Julia, for every day bringing me home.
