Acknowledgements

Firstly, I would like to thank Yoke-Sum Wong. Without her encouragement and interest I would probably never have applied to do a doctorate or become a historian. Secondly, I am grateful to the institutions who have generously supported me along the way: the Arts and Humanities Research Council; Royal Holloway, University of London; the Friendly Hand Trust; the Huntington Library; the North American Conference on British Studies; the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art; the Royal Historical Society; the Fran Trust Foundation; the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography; Wolfson College, Oxford; Gladstone Library; and most recently the University of Birmingham. Throughout this process, Manchester University Press has been a joy to work with. Special thanks to my editor Emma Brennan, who has been supportive at every step, and to Jessica Cuthbert-Smith for being the dream copy-editor.

The descendants and holders of papers belonging to Women's Guild of Arts members have enthralled me with their personal memories, letters, diaries, photographs, sketchbooks, and even tours around their 'Arts and Crafts' homes. Thanks to Wendy Duwell, Sue Field, Sarah Humphries, Phil Johnson, S. R. Kaplan, Chris Moore, Jane Nissen, David Robinson, Arthur Rope, and Richard and Susan Wallington. Archivists, curators, librarians, volunteers, and local historians have been generous in their help. Particular thanks to Rowan Bain, Lorna Beckett, Hannah Carroll, Beverley Cook, Helen Elletson, Leigh Milsom Fowler, Rebecca Green, Monica Grose-Hodge, Gillian Murphy, Judy Willcocks, and Christopher Woodham. Many thanks to David Birch, Master of the Art Workers' Guild in 2016, for inviting me to speak about my research at 6 Queen Square and to the Brothers for their kind words, interest, and support that evening and throughout the time I have been writing this book.

A number of academics, researchers, and friends have helped me over the years by sharing sources, ideas, and advice: Liz Arthur, Sarah Barber, Geoffrey Beare, Caitriona Beaumont, Grace Brockington, Charlotte Brown, Annette Carruthers, Phil Child, Tessa Chynoweth, Gerald Cinamon, Barry Clark, Irene Cockroft, Alan Crawford, Katy Deepwell, Emma Ferry, Kenneth Florey, Matthew Francis, Elaine Fulton, David Gange, Helen Glew, Freya Gowrley, Ian Hamerton, Louise Hardiman, Janice Helland, Tom Hulme, Sarah Kenny, Ben Mechen, Chris Moores, Tara Morton, Stella Moss, Laika Nevalainen, Kate Nichols, Melinda Parsons, James Pugh, Sadiya Qureshi, Derek Sayer, Beth Spacey, Peter Stansky, Alex Windscheffel, and Susan Woodall. Discussions with Laura Carter, Heidi Egginton,

Miranda Garrett, Lyndsey Jenkins, and Lucy Ella Rose have shaped this book. Their generosity in discussing research and sharing ideas has been inspiring. To all of my students at the University of Birmingham, and particularly those who have taken my Special Subject 'British Women and Internationalism since 1850': thank you for contributing to our classes and for sharing your thoughts with me, particularly about the Lyceum Club.

A very generous set of friends and scholars have read the book proposal, chapters, and even the whole book at various stages. I am so grateful to the following for pushing me to think harder and more deeply about Women Art Workers and for taking so much time to engage in my work: firstly, the anonymous reviewers of the manuscript, but also Deborah Cherry, Peter Cormack, Christina de Bellaigue, Kathryn Gleadle, Jane Hamlett, Janice Helland, Matt Houlbrook, Leslie Howsam, Peter Mandler, Joseph McBrinn, Mo Moulton, Otto Saumarez-Smith, Lynne Walker, and William Whyte.

Thank you to my family and to Hannah Hillen, my 'partner in crime' since we were at primary school. My greatest thank you goes to Simon Thomas Parsons for reading every single thing I have written over the last six years with boundless enthusiasm and support, for providing incisive critiques, ideas, and edits on drafts, for keeping me company on research trips, for teaching me so much about medieval history, and for reminding me that there are exciting adventures to be had outside of the archive.
