Acknowledgements

My warmest thanks must go to Alejandro Amenábar himself, who generously gave me several hours of his time in interview, in the summer of 2005, in Madrid, not long after he had returned from promoting Mar adentro in the USA and Japan. His observations, recollections, anecdotes and good humour greatly enriched my knowledge and understanding of his films and their production. I am also grateful to him for dealing so well with subsequent queries and for sending me further details of his shorts by letter. I should also like to express my debt to Sra Magdalena Vázquez Béjar, Amenábar's lawyer, who was instrumental in arranging the above-mentioned interview and who, over the last few years, has been diligent in relaying further questions and queries to him. Also, a special thank you is due to Dra Margarita Lobo, of Madrid's Filmoteca Nacional. Without Dra Lobo's help as intermediary, it is doubtful whether I would have made the initial contact with Sra Vázquez and subsequently with her client, Alejandro Amenábar.

Regarding Amenábar's short films, I also wish to express my deepest thanks to Raquel Gómez Rosado, an early colleague and friend of Amenábar and drama student, who played Silvia in Himenóptero. Apart from a large package of visual materials, she provided me with opinions, anecdotes and clarifications concerning Amenábar's shorts and new information about the role of her father in his early career. I remain eternally grateful to her for these insights.

Among other colleagues in Spain, I am indebted to a number of people who, either directly or indirectly, have helped me track down elusive primary and secondary sources, including Antonio Sempere and Marimar Azcona as well as Vicente Sánchez Biosca, Juan Antonio Palau, Raquel Zapater and Arturo Lozano, at the Filmoteca de Valencia. I am also very grateful to Guillem Vidal Folch, Susana Herreras and of course Fernando Bovaira at Sogecine for helping with stills and permissions. A key acknowledgement must go to Executive Producers Alvaro Agustín and Jaime Ortiz de Artiñano of Telecinco Cinema, who gave me nearly two hours of their time in interview in April 2009 on the production background to Ágora and Spanish cinema more generally. A further thank you is owed to Santiago Juan-Navarro who kindly gave me access to a jointly written monograph on Amenábar, published in French, of which I was unaware.

This book would not have reached the publishers without the support of a number of institutions and individuals. It was completed thanks to a generous Research Leave Award from the Arts and Humanities Research Council during 2005–6. It also benefited from an AHRC grant for a shorter period of study leave in 2004. Moreover, the project would not have prospered had it not been for the support of the Faculty of Humanities at De Montfort University. I would like to thank my ex-Dean, the current Acting Dean and my former Head of Department, namely Professor Philip Martin, Professor Tim O'Sullivan and Dr Ian Hunter (who kindly helped me track down materials on Amenábar's favourite horror director, Peter Medak). I also owe a major debt of gratitude to a number of Hispanist colleagues who, in one way and another, have helped me bring this project to fruition: Professor Mark Allinson, Dr Santiago Fouz-Hernández, Professor Paul Julian Smith, Professor Chris Perriam and Dr Núria Triana-Toribio. Finally, thanks are also in order for the series editors and my publishers at Manchester University Press for their help and encouragement.

Note on other sources:

Reference in the text made to the interview with Amenábar in 2005 and correspondence with him since then is indicated as follows: 'Interview', 'Letter to the author' and 'Email to the author'. In the chapter on Ágora, the 'Interview' in question refers to my conversation with Alvaro Agustín and Jaime Ortiz de Artinaño in 2010. Translations and glosses are my own.
