Acknowledgements

The work of many people has brought this book into being. I would like first to thank my research assistants, who have each made substantial contributions to the project at different times over the last four years. Emma Dollery prepared the typescript of St John's Eve and assisted in notetaking. Gabriela James Noguera conducted research at libraries in London and her native Manchester and helped copyedit the introductions and footnotes for British usage. Charline Jao contributed invaluable research from the project's earliest stages, working especially on material on female Chartist associations. She also prepared the typescript for three plays and helped resolve formatting questions that arose in anthologising four texts with idiosyncratic styles. Finally, Athena Pierquet has been involved with the volume for the last two years, and her thoughtful and insightful work has made a real difference to me. She researched and wrote many of the footnotes, checked the anthologised works against the original texts, and photographed three of the images. I am also grateful for assistance from librarians, archivists, and staff at the British Library, the Working Class Movement Library in Salford, the Manchester County Record Office, the Rare Book & Manuscript Library at Columbia University, and New York University's Fales Library and Special Collections. Charlotte Priddle at Fales and NYU's English subject librarian Amanda Watson are trusted and valuable colleagues. Thanks also to the staff in NYU's English Department and Gallatin School of Individualized Study for much support and guidance, especially Alyssa Leál, Lissette Florez, Patricia Okoh-Esene, Mary Mezzano, Jaysen Henderson-Greenbey, and Will Huntington.

Conversations with many supportive and generous colleagues at NYU have enriched my thinking about Chartist drama. In particular, John Waters helped orient me in the world of nineteenth-century Irish radicalism and greatly assisted my research on re-enactments of Robert Emmet's trial. Julia Jarcho offered a chance for me to teach one of the anthologised plays in her theatre history class, and I profited from discussions with her about theatre and performance. I am also thankful to Elaine Freedgood, Lenora Hanson, David Hobbs, and Dara Regaignon for engaging with this material at the CUNY Victorian seminar.

Thanks also to Anne Humpherys for her invitation to speak at that seminar as well as her support for the project over a period of years. I would also like to thank Joseph Alban, Peder Anker, Gianpaolo Baiocchi, Nick Boggs, Pat Crain, Patrick Deer, Anne DeWitt, Lisa Gitelman, Hannah Gurman, Wendy Lee, John Maynard, Maureen McLane, Crystal Parikh, Sonya Posmentier, Dara Regaignon, Bryce de Reynier, Catherine Robson, Pacharee Sudhinaraset, Simón Trujillo, Eugene Vydrin, and Jini Kim Watson for their friendship and engagement.

My research has profited from the opportunity to discuss it in a variety of contexts, especially at conferences hosted by the Northeast Victorian Studies Association and the North American Victorian Studies Association (NAVSA). I am especially grateful for the work of Sharon Weltman and other members of the NAVSA theatre caucus and to my fellow scholars of radicalism, Mark Allison, Rob Breton, Ian Haywood, and Mike Sanders. William St Clair and Matthew Roberts generously answered queries concerning sources. Thanks also to Mary McAvoy for sharing her pre-publication proofs of her excellent Rehearsing Revolutions: the Labor Drama Experiment and Radical Activism in the Early Twentieth Century.

Institutional support was critical for the completion of the volume. An NYU Center for the Humanities Faculty Fellowship helped launch the project. I would like especially to thank Uli Baer, Gabriela Bastera, Cécile Bishop, MC Hyland, Joan Flores, Ayasha Guerin, Mikiya Koyagi, Heather Lee, Gwynneth Malin, Christine Mladic, Wendy Muñiz, Wendi Muse, Kaitlin Noss, Simón Trujillo, and Hannah Zeavin for their engagement with the project. The Gallatin Research Scholars program and the Gallatin Faculty Enrichment Fund, along with the English department, provided crucial monies for hiring research assistants. I am grateful, moreover, to Susanne Wofford, Dean of the Gallatin School, and to Millery Polyné, Dean of Faculty at Gallatin, and to John Archer and Tom Augst, successive chairs of the English department, for their encouragement and support.

The tables in the volume's introduction first appeared in an article about Chartist drama in Victorian Studies, from which I have also drawn an occasional sentence and one or two paragraphs. My thanks to the journal's editor Rae Greiner as well as the article's anonymous readers, for their helpful suggestions, and also to Indiana University Press for permission to republish. I gratefully acknowledge permission from the British Library Board to reproduce Figure 1; and from the Rare Book & Manuscript Library, Columbia University in the City of New York, to reproduce Figures 2, 3, and 4 (all from the Seligman collection).

I feel fortunate that this book has found a home at Manchester University Press. Thanks to my editors Matthew Frost and Paul Clarke for their commitment to the project; to the anonymous readers of my proposal and manuscript for their suggestions; to Humaira Dudhwala for her efforts overseeing production; to the art department for their work on the cover, which reproduces an image from Kenneth Budd's 1978 Chartist Mural; and to Doreen Kruger for her insightful and meticulous copyediting.

Last, I would like to thank my family for their love and support, especially Susan and Bill Howe, Mark and Barbara Vargo, Benin Ford and Jesse Phillips-Fein, Charlotte Phillips and Oliver Fein, and my mother Geraldine Vargo. My children Clara and Jonah are inspirations. Kim Phillips-Fein has accompanied me through every stage of this project, and her insights about theatre and politics have helped make the plays and their world come alive.

Finally, my efforts on the volume are dedicated to the memory of my father Albert Vargo, who shared with me his love of learning and his kindness and gentleness. Born an ocean away from the coal fields of Wales and a century after the Newport rising, my father grew up in the mining town of IdaMay, West Virginia. The son of a coal miner, he was a lifelong educator and lover of theatre. Among the dozens of playbills he collected from London playhouses are four from the Victoria, the site, 160 years ago, of several benefit productions organised to raise funds for the Chartists.
