I would first like to thank my colleagues for their invaluable feedback and support. I am particularly grateful to Tim Dunne and Richard Devetak for their instrumental guidance throughout this project, and also for their mentoring over the years. I am also grateful to Luke Glanville, Adrian Gallagher, Chris Reus-Smit, Alex Bellamy, Phil Orchard, Jason Ralph, Jack Holland, Graeme Davies and the anonymous reviewers for their valuable input and support. Additionally, I am indebted to the Hon. Gareth Evans, Dr Bernard Kouchner, Professor Mario Bettati and Roland Dumas for taking the time to meet me and answer my questions. Special thanks also go to Tony Mason and Manchester University Press for believing in this book. This research was partly funded by the University of Queensland and the Australian Government: I am grateful to both. I am also grateful to SAGE Publications Ltd, under their Green Open Access Sharing and Archiving Policy, for permission to reproduce sections of Eglantine Staunton, “France and the responsibility to protect: a tale of two norms”, International Relations 32/3 (2018), 366–387 (copyright © 2018 The Author(s), DOI: 10.1177/0047117818773857) in the book, in particular in Chapter 1. Similarly, I thank Taylor and Francis Ltd for permission (4517530699360) to reproduce sections of Eglantine Staunton, “Two decades later: understanding the French response to the Rwandan genocide”, Modern & Contemporary France 24/3 (2016), 299–315 (copyright © 2016 Association for the Study of Modern & Contemporary France, DOI: 10.1080/09639489.2016.1180508) in Chapter 3.

From a more personal point of view, I thank my family for supporting me throughout this exciting yet challenging process but more generally for always being there for me. In particular, I want to thank my patient, kind, funny and caring husband Michael. There are not enough words to express how grateful I am to him for helping me – and being there – every step of the way. Michael’s beautiful soul, his constant positivity and his unwavering faith in me have not only allowed me to undertake this project; they have made my work infinitely better. Thank you also to our wonderful daughter Juliette, who brings me so much joy and inspires me to always aim higher while reminding me of what matters.
