ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Foundational to this project has been the funding and support provided to Richard Scully by the Australian Research Council and Australian government, as part of the Discovery Early Career Researcher Award (2013–2015) 'The cartoon empire: The Anglo-American tradition of political Satire and Comic Art, 1720–2020'. Thanks also to the Australian Academy of the Humanities for their support of this publication.

At Manchester University Press, particular thanks are due to: Emma Brennan, Paul Clarke, John M. MacKenzie (Founding Editor, 'Studies in Imperialism'), and Andrew Thompson. Thanks also to the anonymous reviewers of the proposal and the manuscript.

Colleagues at the editors' home institutions – the University of New England (UNE) and the Flinders University of South Australia – have provided tremendous support over the course of the project. At UNE, particular thanks are owing to Lloyd Weeks; as well as Gina Butler, Heiko Daniel, Kath Dougall, Claire Girvin, Libby Magann, Sharon Marshall, Melissa Pearce, Shirley Rickard, Meg Travers, Fiona Utley, and Trish Wright. At Flinders, thanks to the document delivery team and administration staff in the School of History and International Relations. Thanks also to the organisers of the 21st Australasian Humour Studies Network Conference 2015, Flinders University, Adelaide (4–6 February 2015) where Andrekos Varnava and Casey Raeside presented their chapter as a paper.

Thanks are also due to those other scholars who have connected with the project, and helped drive it in key directions, including: Timothy S. Benson (Political Cartoon Society, London), Mark Bryant (independent scholar), Jane Chapman (University of Lincoln), Fintan Cullen (University of Nottingham), Jules Faber (President, Australian Cartoonists Association), Richard A. Gaunt (University of Nottingham), Hans Harder (Heidelberg University), Reto Hoffman (University of Melbourne), Chris Holdridge (Monash University), Funie Hsu (University of California, Berkeley), Alison Hulme (University College, Dublin), Samuel Hyde (Edge Hill University), Ritu Khanduri (University of Texas, Arlington), Ursula E. Koch (independent scholar), László Kurti (University of Miskolc), John A. Lent (Temple University; and Editor-in-Chief, International Journal of Comic Art), Barbara Mittler (Heidelberg University), John R. Moores (University of York), Annick Pellegrin (University of Sydney), Christopher Rea (University of British Columbia), and Margaret A. Rose (University of Cambridge). Particular thanks is also due to those institutions and individuals who granted permission for the use of their intellectual property in this volume. Every effort has been made to trace the rights holders of visual and other material quoted or otherwise included in this book. If any have been inadvertently overlooked, then the publishers and editors will be happy to make appropriate arrangements to remedy the situation.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Lastly – to our families: Helen, Barnabas, and Maria Varnava, Helena Menih, Patrick and Arthur Scully. We are sustained by your love and support every day. To Natashia Josephine Scully (1981–2016) – you continue to be an inspiration.

Richard Scully and Andrekos Varnava, 2019