Notes on contributors

Dan Beaver is Associate Professor of History and English at Penn State University. He is the author of Parish Communities and Religious Conflict in the Vale of Gloucester, 1590–1690 (1998) and Hunting and the Politics of Violence before the English Civil War (2008) and editor of the Giles Geast Charity Book, Tewkesbury, 1558–1891 (2017).

Thomas Cogswell is a Professor of History at the University of California, Riverside. Having written several books, most recently James I: The Phoenix King (2018) and, with Alastair Bellany, The Murder of King James I (2015), he is now interested in the Dunkirkers and Britain, 1625–1714.

David R. Como is Professor of History at Stanford University. He is the author of Radical Parliamentarians and the English Civil War (2018) and Blown by the Spirit: Puritanism and the Emergence of an Antinomian Underground in Pre-Civil-war England (2004).

Ann Hughes is Professor of Early Modern History (Emerita) at Keele University. She has published extensively on the English Revolution, including Gender and Politics in the English Revolution (2012), and (as co-editor) The Complete Works of Gerrard Winstanley (2009). She is now working on a biography of the Presbyterian activist Walter Boothby, and on responses to preaching in the 1640s.

Chris R. Kyle is Associate Professor of History at Syracuse University. He is the author of Theatre of State (2012) and most recently the editor of Managing Tudor and Stuart Parliaments (2015). He is currently writing a book on the promulgation and reception of early modern proclamations.

Noah Millstone is a Birmingham Fellow in the Department of History at the University of Birmingham. He is the author of Manuscript Circulation and the Invention of Politics in Early Stuart England (2016) as well as a number of articles and essays on early modern politics and culture.

Lindsay O'Neill is an Assistant Professor of Teaching in the history department at the University of Southern California and the author of The Opened Letter: Networking in the Early Modern British World (2014).

Jason Peacey is Professor of Early Modern British History at University College London. Having published on print and political culture in the seventeenth century, he is now working on a microhistory relating to litigation and conflict in early modern Britain and on Anglo-Dutch relations between 1609 and 1689.

Rachel Weil is Professor of History at Cornell University in Ithaca, NY. She is the author of A Plague of Informers: Conspiracy and Political Trust in William III's England (2013) and Political Passions: Gender, the Family and Political Argument in England 1680–1714 (2009). She is currently writing a book on early modern English prisons.

Jennifer Wells is Assistant Professor of History and International Affairs at The George Washington University. She has published widely on British and Irish history, the British Empire, statecraft and international law.