ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editors would like to extend their sincere thanks to the contributors for working so enthusiastically to produce chapters for this volume. For their patience in dealing with our queries, and in awaiting publication of the book, we are immensely grateful. Staff at Manchester University Press have been very supportive at every stage of the project, and have shown exceptional attention to detail, patience and diplomacy throughout the editorial process. The anonymous readers of the book proposal and draft manuscript have provided us with valued suggestions for improvement, and we are grateful for these. Steve Rigby has been more than generous with his time and knowledge, going far beyond the call of duty in his role as series editor. His support and advice have been invaluable. We owe thanks to many colleagues who have helped us throughout the duration of this project, and would especially like to note our gratitude to Peter Coss, Peter Fleming, Colin Richmond, Nigel Saul and Carole Weinberg and for their encouragement and guidance.

RR and AT

My special thanks go to Steve Rigby for his unfailing confidence in this project ever since I first mentioned it to him five years ago, and Sarah Williams, whose gentry seminar at York in 1999 marked a new stage in my research into gentry culture, and whose involvement as co-editor during the early stages of this project helped to gain the participation of the first contributors. My sincere gratitude also goes to Alison for helping to bring my original idea to fruition. Sarah Alyn Stacey and Peter Field have imparted invaluable advice and personal support as colleagues and friends, and my sister Cristina Radulescu Bernard brought ever so much inspiration and encouragement throughout the project.

RR

My personal thanks are due to Raluca for inviting me to co-edit this volume with her. I have benefited, as ever, from the generous support of my family and friends, but I offer my deepest thanks to my husband, David Boughey. Despite his own demanding workload, he happily amused our young baby while I continued to write and edit; without his support my participation in this project would have been impossible. Benjamin has cheerfully tolerated my preoccupation with all things gentle, and continues to offer inspiration, motivation and distraction in his own delightful way.
