Notes on contributors

Sir Hilary Beckles is the eighth Vice-Chancellor of the University of the West Indies. Under his leadership the institution has spearheaded an aggressive global reputation, building strategy that has resulted in ten global centres in partnership with universities in North America, Latin America, Asia, Africa and Europe. He has lectured extensively in Europe, the Americas, Africa and Asia, and has published over 100 peer-reviewed essays in scholarly journals, and over twenty books on a range of subjects including Atlantic and Caribbean history, gender relations in the Caribbean, sport development and popular culture.

David Brown is Archival Discovery Lead for Beyond 2022: Virtual Record Treasury of Ireland. Prior to this, he has worked on the Irish Research Council-funded Down Survey of Ireland project and a multivolume critical edition of the Books of Survey and Distribution for the Irish Manuscripts Commission. His monograph Empire and Enterprise: Money, Power and the Adventurers for Irish Land during the British Civil Wars was published by Manchester University Press in 2022.

José Brownrigg-Gleeson is a Maria Zambrano research fellow at the Universidad de Salamanca in Spain, where he is a member of the research group GIR-Indusul. Formerly an Irish Research Council postdoctoral fellow at the National University of Ireland, Galway, and a National Endowment for the Humanities fellow at the University of Notre Dame, his research centres on the interactions between Ireland, the Irish diaspora and the Hispanic world during the Age of Revolutions. His most recent article is ‘Fighting an empire for the good of the empire? Transnational Ireland and the struggle for independence in Spanish America’, Radical History Review 143 (May 2022).

Claire Connolly is Professor of Modern English at University College Cork and has published extensively on eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Irish literature. With Marjorie Howes (Boston College), she was General Editor of a new six-volume series, Irish Literature in Transition, 1700–2015 (2020); and she is also the editor for Volume II of the series, Irish Literature in Transition, 1780–1830.

David Dickson is Professor Emeritus of Modern History at Trinity College Dublin. He has had a longstanding interest in Ireland’s place in transatlantic empires, a theme explored in his Old World Colony: Cork and South Munster 1630–1830 (2005), and in The First Irish Cities: An Eighteenth-Century Transformation (2021).

Nicholas Draper was the founding director of the Centre for the Study of the Legacies of British Slavery at University College London (UCL) until his retirement in August 2019; co-director of the Structure and Significance of British Caribbean Slave-Ownership 1763–1833 project at UCL between 2013 and 2015; and a founder member of its precursor, the Legacies of British Slave-Ownership project, between 2009 and 2012. His book Legacies of British Slave-Ownership: Colonial Slavery and the Formation of Victorian Britain (with C. Hall and others) was published in 2014. His The Price of Emancipation: Slave-Ownership, Compensation and British Society at the End of Slavery (2010) was awarded the Royal Historical Society’s Whitfield Prize and shortlisted for the Frederick Douglass Prize.

David A. Fleming is a historian of eighteenth-century Ireland. On completing his undergraduate studies at the University of Limerick, he was awarded, in 2006, a D.Phil. from the University of Oxford, where he had been a senior scholar at Hertford College and an Arts and Humanities Research Council postgraduate awardee. His research concentrates on the social and political development of eighteenth-century Ireland, and he has published on topics including provincial politics, poverty, religious conversion, associational behaviour and prostitution. Dr Fleming was commissioned, in 2012, to write the official history of the University of Limerick.

Aaron Graham is a lecturer in early modern British economic history in the Department of History at University College London. He is currently finishing a study of state formation and slavery in Jamaica during the Age of Revolutions, entitled Tropical Leviathan: Slavery, Society and Security in Jamaica, 1770–1840.

Emily Mann is Associate Professor of Architectural History, Race and Spatial Justice at the Bartlett School of Architecture, University College London, having previously taught and studied at the Courtauld Institute. of Art in London. She is the incoming editor (from 2023) of the journal Architectural History.

Charles Ivar McGrath lectures in history at University College Dublin. His publications include The Making of the Eighteenth-Century Irish Constitution: Government, Parliament and the Revenue, 1692–1714 (2000); Ireland and Empire, 1692–1770 (2012); and Lansdowne FC: A History (2022). He has co-edited three essay collections, published articles in Irish Historical Studies, Parliamentary History, Eighteenth-Century Ireland, English Historical Review and History of European Ideas, and has provided chapters and entries in a range of edited collections and biographical dictionaries. He is co-principal investigator, with Dr Suzanne Forbes, of the Open University, on a Government of Ireland/HEA Shared Ireland North–South Research Programme project entitled Our Shared Built Military Heritage: The Online Mapping, Inventorising and Recording of the Army Barracks of Ireland, 1690–1921.

Sandrine Uwase Ndahiro is a third-year English Ph.D. student at the University of Limerick. Sandrine’s research employs theoretical frameworks associated with the field of postcolonial studies to read the environmental crisis unfolding in Africa from an Africanist cultural perspective. She has published various works on race, identity and the Anthropocene.

Louis P. Nelson is Professor of Architectural History and the Vice-Provost for Academic Outreach at the University of Virginia. He is a specialist in the built environments of the early modern Atlantic world, with published work on the American South, the Caribbean, and West Africa, including two book-length monographs, three edited collections of essays and numerous articles. The Beauty of Holiness: Anglicanism and Architecture in Colonial South Carolina (2009) was widely celebrated and Architecture and Empire in Jamaica (2016) won three major book awards.

Finola O’Kane is a landscape historian, architect and conservation specialist. A professor at the School of Architecture, Planning and Environmental Policy, University College Dublin, she has published widely on eighteenth-century Irish and Caribbean landscapes, and on Irish urban and suburban history. Her books include Landscape Design in Eighteenth-Century Ireland: Mixing Foreign Trees with the Natives (2004), Ireland and the Picturesque: Design, Landscape Painting and Tourism in Ireland 1700–1830 (2013) and the forthcoming Landscape Design and Revolution in Ireland and the United States, 1688–1815.
Ciaran O’Neill is Ussher Associate Professor in Nineteenth-Century History at Trinity College Dublin. His books include Catholics of Consequence: Transnational Education, Social Mobility and the Irish Catholic Elite, 1850–1900 (2014), which was awarded the James S. Donnelly Sr Prize for History and the Social Sciences in 2015. He is co-director of the Trinity Colonial Legacies project and is preparing a monograph entitled Life in a Palliative State: Power and Powerlessness in Union Ireland (forthcoming in 2023).

Thomas M. Truxes is a Clinical Professor of Irish Studies and History at New York University. He has written extensively on the commercial economy of the early modern Atlantic, particularly Ireland’s trade with British America and the transnational Caribbean in the era before the American Revolution. His most recent book, The Overseas Trade of British America: A Narrative History, was published in 2021.

Natalie A. Zacek is Senior Lecturer in American Studies at the University of Manchester. Her first book, Settler Society in the English Leeward Islands, 1670–1776 (2010), won the Royal Historical Society’s Gladstone Prize. She is currently completing a book about horse-racing in the nineteenth-century United States, and is beginning a study of the impact of West Indian absentee planters on later Georgian London.

Nuala Zahedieh is a Research Associate at the Centre for History and Economics, University of Cambridge and a Research Fellow at the Wilberforce Institute for Slavery and Emancipation, University of Hull. She is formerly Professor of Economic and Social History at the University of Edinburgh where she taught from 1989–2021. Her research focuses on the British Atlantic economy in the age of slavery and publications include The Capital and the Colonies: London and the Atlantic Economy, 1660–1700 (2010).