Acknowledgements

A core group of academic colleagues that form the Edinburgh Environmental Humanities Network have been a constant source of support, encouragement and perceptive feedback. Thanks in particular to Michelle Bastian, Emily Brady, David Farrier, Franklin Ginn, Jeremy Kidwell, Michael Northcott and Françoise Wemelsfelder. I have the honour to work in an amazing department (History of Art) in an equally supportive institution, Edinburgh College of Art at the University of Edinburgh. I would like to thank every single colleague for making this a special place to teach and research. Particular thanks to Patricia Allmer, Matt Brennan, Chris Breward, Sue Cavanagh, Vicky Coltman, Neil Cox, Angela Dimitrakaki, Paul Jenkins, Ed Juler, Kirsten Lloyd, Halle O'Neal, Heather Pulliam, Carol Richardson, Harry Weeks, Christian Weikop and Richard Williams. My students at all levels have over the years offered more than they realise in terms of energy, thoughtfulness and a testing ground for ideas. Thanks in particular to my pioneering students who took 'Radical Nature: art and ecology from Joseph Beuys to the Present'.

Those involved in the panel on 'Art History and Ecology' held at the Association for Art History's Annual Conference in 2014 provided a major launchpad for this book. Grateful thanks to my co-chair Jenny Walden and session speakers T. J. Demos, Maja and Reuben Fowkes, Majella Munro, Alistair Rider, Wood Roberdeau and Victoria Walters. Continuing conversations with T. J. Demos and Alistair Rider have been very helpful. The opportunity to be part of Immortality and Infinitude in the Anthropocene at the KTH Royal Institute of Technology, Stockholm, in 2014 was crucial to my thinking. Thanks to Thom van Dooren, Heather Davis, Astrida Neimanis and Vinciane Despret for inspiring discussions. A special shout out too to Eddie MacCallum for providing the perfect writer's retreat at Peninver Sands Caravan Park, Kintyre. Thanks to the staff at Manchester University Press, especially Emma Brennan and Alun Richards, to my series editors Amelia Jones and Marsha Meskimmon, to the staff at Bouchier (Elizabeth Stone and David Hawkins), my indexer, Martin Hargreaves, and my anonymous reviewers.

I have greatly benefitted from in-depth insights from close friends and colleagues whose generosity and kindness has always amazed me – in particular I should like to thank Emilios Christodoulidis, Bill Hare and Irit Rogoff. A wider circle of people very close to me, to whom I owe much, are Alistair Currie, Cecil and Shirley Finn, Ilana Halperin, Jane Macmillan, Alistair and Alison McGuigan and Alan Ness.

Finally, this book simply would not have happened without the support and encouragement of my wonderful wife Maureen Finn, and my equally wonderful sons Ross and Matthew and of course our ‘companion spaniel’, Oscar. Thank you.

Andrew Patrizio, Edinburgh