This book was funded by HERA II: Humanities in the European Research Area, which from 2013 to 2016 sponsored our three-year collaborative research project, The Enterprise of Culture: International Structures and Connections in the Fashion Industry since 1945. We are grateful to the HERA II Research Programme, the European Science Foundation, and the national funding agencies who are part of the HERA funding network for their confidence in our exploration of the business and economic aspects of the global fashion industry, which has been most often studied from a theoretical or cultural perspective.

Over the three years of its existence, the Enterprise of Culture project sponsored more than a dozen public events and academic conferences on the business history of European fashion; produced numerous books, journal issues, and academic articles; and hopefully, laid the foundation for further research in this territory. This anthology is mainly based on research by the core team and partners of The Enterprise of Culture, with contributions by scholars who participated in some of our meetings and conferences. The title of our research project, The Enterprise of Culture, reflects our interdisciplinary approach to research on the history of the fashion industry.

The Enterprise of Culture was a collaborative endeavour, and we are grateful to our team. We warmly thank Principal Investigators Shiona Chillas and Barbara Townley at the University of St Andrews, Alan McKinlay at the University of Newcastle, Robert MacIntosh at Heriot-Watt University, and Ben Wubs at Erasmus University; Advisory Board members Geoffrey Jones at the Harvard Business School, Giorgio Riello at the University of Warwick, and Hartmut Berghoff at the University of Göttingen; and collaborators at our two Associated Partners: Alexander Husebye, Ingrid Giertz-Mårtenson, and Anders Houlitz at the Centre for Business History in Stockholm, and Glenn Adamson and Sonnet Stanfill at the V&A. Thanks also go to Andrew MacLaren at Heriott-Watt University; Melinda Grewar at the University of St Andrews; Thierry Maillet at Erasmus University; Richard Coopey at Aberystwyth University; Katharine Carter and her staff at the Marks and Spencer Company Archive at the University of Leeds; and the research team at the University of Oslo, comprised of Tereza Kuldova, Mari Kirkerud Pettersen, and Johanna Zanon.

We are grateful to several individuals who helped to bring our work on the business history of fashion to fruition, including Fiona Blair in the Enterprise of Culture's home office at the University of Leeds, Graham Loud and Simon Hall at the University of Leeds; Tør Egil Forland, Erlend Haavardsholm, Henrik Olav Mathiesen, and Tarjei Solberg at the University of Oslo; David Appleyard, Emma Brennan, Paul M. Clarke, Bethan Hirst, Alun Richards, Deborah Smith, and Susan J. Womersley at Manchester University Press; and our very capable subeditors Mary Schoeser and Diane Mackay, who are blessed with talent, patience, and endurance. We are also thankful to Jon Williams and Lucas Clawson at the Hagley Museum and Library for providing us with the DuPont Company photograph on the cover of this book, which also served as the main image for The Enterprise of Culture.
