Contributors

Brendon J. Cannon is an assistant professor of International Security at the Institute of International and Civil Security, Khalifa University of Science and Technology (Abu Dhabi, UAE). His research interests include contextualising domestic, regional and international relations in eastern Africa, regional security in the Gulf and the western Indian Ocean region.

Abdinor Dahir is a graduate student at St Anthony’s College, University of Oxford. He is also a Researcher at TRT World Research Center and Project Coordinator for the TRT World Citizen Initiative.

Umer Karim is a doctoral researcher at the University of Birmingham focusing on Saudi foreign policy, decision making and its implications for the politics and security of the Middle East. He is also a Visiting Fellow at the Royal United Services Institute, where he focuses on Pakistan’s evolving political and security environment within its neighbourhood.

Taimur Khan is a non-resident fellow at the Arab Gulf States Institute in Washington, as well as a journalist who has written extensively on the contemporary politics of the Gulf Arab states and Pakistan. His work has appeared in Foreign Policy, Foreign Affairs, World Policy Journal, Al Jazeera America and New York Magazine among others.

Mara A. Leichtman is associate professor of Anthropology at Michigan State University and a founding faculty member of the Muslim Studies Program. She is the author of Shi‘i Cosmopolitanisms in Africa: Lebanese Migration and Religious Conversion in Senegal (Indiana University Press 2015).

Eric Lob is an associate professor in the Department of Politics and International Relations at Florida International University. His research focuses on the intersection of development and politics in the Middle East. Lob is the author of Iran’s Reconstruction Jihad: Rural Development and Regime Consolidation after 1979 (Cambridge University Press, 2020).

Simon Mabon is director of the Richardson Institute at Lancaster University and holds a Chair in International Relations. Professor Mabon is also director of the Carnegie Corporation-funded Sectarianism, Proxies and De-sectarianization project. His latest book is Houses Built on Sand: Violence, Sectarianism and Revolution in the Middle East (Manchester University Press, 2020).

Robert Mason is a non-resident fellow at the Arab Gulf States Institute in Washington. He focuses on Gulf politics, Euro–Med relations and Asia–Middle East relations. His latest work is a textbook titled New Perspectives on Middle East Politics: Economy, Society and International Relations (American University in Cairo Press, 2021).

Marwa Maziad is an international relations and Middle East media and politics expert. She is currently a Turkey civil–military relations researcher and Israel Studies research scholar at the University of Washington. Maziad is also a regular political analyst on Al Jazeera English, BBC Arabic, France 24 and CNN International.

Ash Rossiter is an assistant professor of International Security. His academic specialisation is at the nexus of technology and international security, with a particular focus on military innovation. Dr Rossiter’s research interests and teaching areas also encompass the changing character of war and conflict and the shifting geopolitics of the Indo-Pacific region.

Mohammed Sharfi is currently working as a senior consultant at the Diplomatic Institute in the State of Qatar. He previously worked for the United Nations in Sudan and Switzerland as information analyst and human rights officer. His latest book is Islamist Foreign Policy in Sudan: Between Radicalism and the Search for Survival (Routledge, 2019).

David Styan is lecturer in politics at Birkbeck, University of London, where he focuses on international political economy, foreign policy analysis and development. In addition to his work on French foreign policy, he has written extensively on the Horn of Africa, most notably on the Ethiopian economy.

Aleksi Ylönen is an associate professor of International Relations at the United States International University – Africa. He has held a number of positions in various research and higher education institutions in Europe. His recent book is On State, Marginalization, Origins of Rebellion: The Formation of Insurgencies in Southern Sudan (Africa World Press, 2016).

Karen E. Young is a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, where she studies the political economy of the Middle East, with a special focus on the states of the Gulf Cooperation Council. She regularly teaches at the Foreign Service Institute at the US Department of State, and has taught at George Washington University and the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies.